'Destructive' pylons plan toppled – but fight goes on

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

PLANS to put up hundreds of electricity pylons across the Kent countryside have been blocked by the Government.

Campaigners feared huge swathes of land, including Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB), would be blighted by the 150ft pylons.

Proposals from the National Grid would have created a generation scheme at Dungeness with power lines running across the county and straddling the countryside of west Kent.

Although a route had not been confirmed, Protect Kent, the county's branch of Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE), said it was aware of a plan for lines to run from Rowden near Croydon through to Lydd.

But these have been scuppered after they failed to survive a government strategic review.

National Grid spokesman Anthony Quarrell said: "We had an agreement to connect the proposed generation scheme at Dungeness C. However, the scheme did not make it through the Government's strategic review on future nuclear power stations."

While Protect Kent campaigners were celebrating the announcement, a spokesman said plans for a line of pylons in east Kent was still on the agenda.

"We are extremely pleased to hear of the west Kent pylons scheme being abandoned by National Grid. It is wonderful that this area of beautiful landscape is not going to be destroyed by rows of massive pylons, however, we must maintain our vigilance.

"The line of pylons from Canterbury to Richborough still seems to be on the agenda so we really need to pressure National Grid to rethink their plans.

"I also find it unbelievable that we are still no closer to undergrounding new pylons as so many other European countries are now doing.

"For a progressive country such as ours to be unwilling to spend a small sum of money to ensure our landscapes retain their natural beauty is unthinkable, and shows National Grid is putting

BT has called for a partnership approach to tackle Kent's rural internet problem.

The telecom giant plans to upgrade 13 broadband exchanges in the county as part of a £2.5 billion scheme, but says more support is needed to provide 'not-spot' areas with the fastest speeds. PAGE 7

LIBERAL Democrat leader Nick Clegg has denied he is solely responsible for the party's disastrous collapse in Kent.

During a visit to Maidstone, the Deputy Prime Minister said it was a joint decision to enter into the Coalition and he does not regret putting the country before his party. PAGE 10 profit before people." Protect Kent said cables should be laid underground, something the National Grid claims will cost £22 million per kilometre instead of the equivalent overhead line cost of £1.8m/km.

But research carried out by the environmental campaign group found the cost of underground lines was £3.5m/km.

National Grid stuck by its argument that underground cables would be too costly and that overhead lines were quicker to repair.

Spokesman Mr Quarrell added: "Britain is facing what has been dubbed 'the energy challenge'.

"With many power stations due to close in the coming years, new energy infrastructure must be built to ensure people continue to enjoy the safe, secure and reliable energy supplies to which they have become accustomed."

National Grid is responsible for offering new connections to network operators that want to generate electricity or need a high-voltage supply.

Last month, defence secretary Dr Liam Fox stated his opposition for towering overhead pylons to be built across the country.

Mums-to-be face closure of birthing units in NHS review

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

FEARS have been raised over potential changes to birthing facilities in east Kent, with critics questioning the future of maternity services across the county.

Four options have been put forward by an NHS review group, including ending pregnant women delivering at birthing units in Dover and Canterbury.

Although antenatal, postnatal and community services would still be available, expectant mothers would have to travel to either the QEOM in Margate or William Harvey in Ashford to have their babies.

A new £300,000 midwife-led facility is due to open in Thanet, located within the QEOM which has a traditional consultant-led service.

During a meeting of the health overview and scrutiny committee at Kent County Council last week, Cllr Nigel Collor, who represents Dover town, warned that women could end up "having their babies delivered at the side of the road by paramedics on motorbikes" as they tried to reach a place to give birth.

"What assurances can we have for the wider service of east Kent? There are a lot of unanswered questions," he added.

Cllr Keith Ferrin, also on the health overview and scrutiny committee, said he was becoming increasingly concerned with capacity and the wider issue of maternity across the county.

The review, led by a Maternity Services Review Group and involving temporary suspension of births at Dover and Canterbury units in January, was driven by the aim to have a higher rate of midwives to births – at 1:28, to allow one-to-one care during labour.

Folkestone GP Dr Sarah Montgomery, who chaired

LABOUR OF LOVE: The Maternity Services Review Group has argued that two hospital choices are needed to give mums-to-be the safest possible birthing option the review, said midwife to birth ratio varied from 1:9 in units in Dover and Canterbury to 1:40 in the consultant-led unit at Ashford, which deals with the most complex deliveries.

"Before the temporary closures on average there were five births a week at Dover, seven at Canterbury, 56 at Margate and 70 at the William Harvey," she said.

"Births at the stand alone units in Canterbury and Dover have been declining for the past five years."

The four options put forward by the review group were to:

■ Maintain all facilities including births at Canterbury and Dover and open Thanet hospital midwifery-led unit. Cost £2,126,667.

■ Maintain all facilities including births at Canterbury. Stop births at Dover. Open Thanet hospital midwifery-led unit. Cost £1,475,241.

■ Maintain births at Dover but not at Canterbury. Open Thanet hospital midwifery-led unit, cost £1,355,320.

■ Stop births at Canterbury and Dover, open Thanet hospital midwifery-led unit. Cost £700,468.

Dr Montgomery said: "The Maternity Services Review Group believes that offering the choice of giving birth at two hospitals is the safest, fairest and most sustainable option for the long-term future.

"By changing services in this way, it will be possible to provide every woman with one-to-one care in labour. It also means parents still have a choice about the type of birth they want – a home birth, a low intervention birth at a midwife-led unit, or at consultant-led unit for those mums at higher risk."

A three-month public consultation is expected to start next month to consider the options.

Cllr Alan Willicombe, who is on the health overview and scrutiny committee, said: "Not long ago we had a consultation about Maidstone (maternity services) and came to a decision that unfortunately was not listened to or upheld by the government inspector.

"I'm questioning the value of the consultation. I would like to ask that for this consultation the NHS makes sure they are hearing what people are saying and that they do not overweigh the report in their favour with findings that are sometimes questionable."

Who does he think he is? War story a sombre note in funny man's past

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

COMEDIAN Alan Carr received some shocking home truths when exploring his Kentish roots for a BBC One show.

The camp comic was the star of Wednesday night's popular Who Do You Think You Are? show, but the discovery his great grandfather Henry Carter was a World War One deserter was no laughing matter.

Mr Carter fled the 33rd Division of the British Army shortly after signing up in 1915, and moved with his wife Annie to Crayford, near Dartford, where he changed his name to Richard Mercer. Their eight sons all fought in World War Two.

Dr Sandra Dunster of the University of Greenwich was filmed with Carr at the Centre for Kentish Studies in Maidstone, where she showed evidence of her findings, including documents confirming his great grandfather's name change as well as a period photograph of the Vickers weapons factory in Crayford, where he worked during the war.

Dr Dunster said: "Finding out a family secret like this can be a difficult experience for anyone to go through.

"Alan has a reputation as a funny man, and he is very warm and engaging in person. He used his humour to deal with the situation and put me at ease in front of the camera.

"He asked a lot of intelligent questions, showing an interest in the historical context, and was a delight to work with."

Carr – the son of former Maidstone United manager Graham Carr – would have been wise to keep a low profile upon his return to the town following comments he made about its residents in 2008.

The stand-up star branded Maidstone racist, sexist and homophobic, adding that its audiences were the worst he had faced.

"They hated me," he said. "It was full of homophobic, narrow-minded morons. And it wasn't just me; if you were black or Asian you got abuse."

Despite his criticism of the town, Carr was more than happy to return so he could learn more about his family history.

Earlier this year Strictly Come Dancing judge Len Goodman, who runs a dance studio in Dartford, also appeared on the show and was surprised to discover his ancestors were so poor they were sent to a Victorian workhouse.

Dr June Balshaw, principal lecturer in history at the University of Greenwich, said: "The great thing about this series is that it encourages people to find out more about the hidden histories of their families."

"When you get your hands dirty in the archives you can start to interpret data and locate it within broader social and historical contexts."

➔ Bomb scare by school

BOMB disposal teams carried out a controlled explosion on a package left near the Diocesan of Payne Smith Primary School in Canterbury.

The object, which was discovered by an off-duty police officer in Broad Street, at about 1.15pm on Wednesday, forced an evacuation of the immediate area.

The bomb disposal unit carried out a controlled explosion just before 4pm, and people were allowed back into their homes at about 7pm.

➔ 999 targets missed

AMBULANCES are only meeting their target response times in a handful of locations in Kent.

The South East Coast Ambulance service (SECAmb) is failing to meet the Government's goal of responding to 75 per cent of category A call-outs within eight minutes in seven areas in Kent between April, 2010, and March this year.

Despite this, across the county, the average ambulance response time was six minutes and 40 seconds, with SECAmb reaching 76 per cent of all its call-outs inside the eight minute period.

Doctor Who stars are by the seaside to film TV dramas

A HOST of big name stars, among them David Tennant, Billie Piper, Jane Horrocks, David Morrissey and Ashley Walters, are heading to Kent to shoot a major new series of BBC dramas.

Love Life will air on BBC One next year, spearheaded by award-winning writer and director Dominic Savage, 49, who was born in Margate.

The star-studded line-up will shoot scenes in Thanet as part of a five-part series centred around Margate.

Former child actor Mr Savage said: "I am looking to create something special that has a modern view on the age old mystery of love; something that expresses the reality of love and puts it on the screen. I am looking to explore these themes in the seaside town of Margate, with a group of incredibly talented actors who are ready to journey with me on this."

Love Life explores five powerful and overlapping love stories set in the same town. Each story looks at a different relationship and explores a different dilemma or situation.

Former Doctor Who David Tennant will appear in the first – his dilemma occurs when his first love reappears and disrupts his happily married family life. His former companion in the sci-fi hit, Billie Piper will appear in the second as a teacher drawn to one of her female pupils.

Ben Stephenson, controller, BBC Drama commissioning, said: "This is a complete first in TV drama on BBC One: a serial made through improvisation. It features some of our very best acting talent working in a way we've never seen on screen from them before, using improvisation to push the boundaries of each story, to get right to the heart of the truth."

Each film will be semi-improvised as Mr Savage works through scenarios with the actors to find truth and authenticity. He has won numerous awards for his work, including two Baftas for best single drama, and the Edinburgh International Film Award for best new feature.

Filming details are being kept a closely guarded secret.

EDUCATION

Schools to take more control of their cash

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE rising number of academies has pushed Kent County Council to "tipping point", forcing the authority to hand over Government funds directly to headteachers for schools to buy their own services.

Education chiefs said it would help create a level playing field, where maintained schools will have the same control over their funds as academies from April next year.

Cabinet member for education, Cllr Mike Whiting, said KCC had spoken with its schools about them each taking responsibility for buying services which were previously provided directly thorough the authority and paid for centrally out of the Government grant.

"If agreed, this will allow greater parity between community and academy schools' funding and give them some of the extra financial flexibility, choice and independence offered by academy status," he said. "Also, by moving services to a traded basis it will mitigate the effects of schools converting to academy status."

The latest Department for Education figures showed 49 of 101 secondary schools had changed to academy status, with a number of primary schools now following suit.

Academies are given state funding directly which they use to buy services, such as support for special education needs, teacher recruitment and catering, from providers, including KCC.

Fears were raised last year that once the number of academies had pushed KCC to "tipping point" – when it is uneconomic for the council

FUNDING: The number of academies means it is no longer viable for KCC to provide many services to provide services automatically to maintained schools – KCC would have to run as a service provider, competing with other businesses, with less funding for schools in its control.

But Cllr Whiting said there were a range of educational services KCC had a statutory responsibility to provide for children, whether or not the school chose to become an academy.

The council has launched EduKent to provide all schools with the support services they require by a team of headteachers.

"The decision whether to apply for academy status is a matter for individual governing bodies to consider. However, schools do not necessarily need to change status to benefit from many of those freedoms which are available to academies," said Cllr Whiting.

"KCC is committed to working with all schools across Kent irrespective of their status. We see all schools and academies as part of the Kent family of schools and what matters the most is making sure children and young people get the best start in life and are able to fulfil their potential."

Education experts first expressed fears last year that KCC may be forced to change the way it provided services.

The growing number of academies has now pushed the council to the feared "tipping point".

Peter Read, from Gravesend-based Kent Independent Advice, said: "One of the reasons a lot of good secondary schools have become academies is they do not need the support that KCC has to find for all schools.

"Taking funds away puts more pressure on the schools left that really need the extra resources.

"Academies are financially better off than state schools. The trade-off is the appropriate support from KCC but that support is to be cut dramatically through the loss of funding."

He added: "Kent has been left with a rump of secondary schools many of which have problems and need extra resources to support them which don't exist because funding has been given to academies, which are already successful schools."

Police defend UK's highest 'no crimes' rate for rape offences

KENT Police has defended itself from criticism of the high number of rape claims dismissed as 'no crimes'.

Figures released by the Association of Chief Police Officers (Acpo) reveal that last year 30 per cent of rape claims in Kent – the highest in the country – fell into the 'no crime' category.

The vast majority of rape claims classed as 'no crimes' in England and Wales are due to a force obtaining clear evidence that a rape did not take place, but many are also down to alleged victims failing to substantiate their claims.

Campaigners from charity Women Against Rape say this does not mean a crime did not take place, adding that the high figures are "insulting" and send out a "terrible message".

But Kent Police said the method of 'no-crime' – which forms part of the Home Office's accounting rules – has nothing to do with how seriously the force investigates allegations of rape.

A spokesman said: "It is unfortunate that use of the term has been interpreted negatively in some cases, there have even been misleading suggestions that it shows police do not take rape seriously.

"Everyone who reports rape is treated with dignity and respect and is taken seriously. Kent Police has a high conviction rate, and of the cases that go to court 72.5 per cent result in prosecutions."

The Acpo figures come four years after an in-depth review of the way rape allegations are handled by police and prosecutors found some cases were being dropped prematurely.

The findings by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and Her Majesty's Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate found that police wrongly recorded rape allegations as 'no crime' in nearly a third of cases when the claims should have been investigated further.

Police said a recent review of open cases resulted in above average 'no crimes' between April 2010 and March 2011.

The spokesman added: "The way the force investigates rape is reviewed regularly and we are constantly striving to offer victims an enhanced support service. Officers work closely with the Crown Prosecution Service and this has helped us in many successful prosecutions for this serious offence."

Felicity goes it alone to cross Antarctica

By Ian Patel

ian.patel@archant.co.uk

SHE conquered the South Pole with seven brave women by her side, but now adventurer Felicity Aston is going solo in a bid to become the first female to cross Antarctica alone.

The 33-year-old, who lives in Birchington, will attempt 1,700 km in 70 days, with no-one but herself and the harsh environment for company.

Speaking to KoS during training for the gruelling ski trek, she admitted the loneliness was already worrying her.

"The biggest challenge will be my mental state. I've got to keep my mind busy. Boredom is the worst thing and trying to keep a positive mental attitude is important," she said.

"This is totally different to what I have done before – it's the first expedition I've done on my own, which makes it a lot more dangerous."

In December, 2009, Miss Aston successfully completed the Kaspersky Lab Commonwealth Antarctic Expedition, where she led a team of seven women from different Commonwealth countries to the South Pole.

"I'm already missing the girls and I know that although one person getting ready for an expedition is a little easier than eight, it's daunting knowing I'll be on my own," she said.

"Having said that, there is an appeal of having Antarctica to myself."

But Miss Aston admitted she was more vulnerable this time around.

"Where in a team someone will notice if you are struggling or acting funny, I will have to be aware of that myself – that worries me.

"I have to make sure I'm

LONELY PURSUIT:

Felicity Aston has reached the South Pole as part of a team but says she is now looking forward to 'having Antarctica all to myself' as she embarks upon her solo expedition more cautious; I have to be concentrating 100 per cent of the time and make good decisions. It's unnerving."

She added: "The training I'm doing at the moment is all about increasing stamina with low intensity training such as long slow jogs and pulling tyres."

Miss Aston is working with a psychologist who will track her behaviour through podcasts as part of a study.

"He'll be able to see the impact of such a trip on a person. I'm going to try experiments with my mind, for example, if I think of scenes from the seaside continuously, I could start to hallucinate those images.

"In previous trips I've had hallucinogenic experiences.

"You know it's not real but you can see yourself walking through a valley or on a beach."

But the intrepid explorer, who already has a long list of adventurous expeditions under her belt, said she is looking forward to the trip, called the Kaspersky One Transantarctic Expedition.

She is leaving Kent on November 2 and will start skiing in Antarctica 10 days later.

Adult social care charges to rise

MORE than 5,000 elderly and disabled people will soon find out how they will be affected by plans to raise the cost of providing adult social care in Kent.

The county council wants to increase the amount of available income taken into account when working out how much to charge a person, while also asking mental health patients to contribute for the first time.

It also plans to include day care and transport as part of the services that can be charged for, in an attempt to save about £2.9 million a year.

More than 6,700 residents, carers, MPs, councils and NHS staff responded to a 12-week consultation into the proposals, and a report containing a summary of their views will be discussed by KCC cabinet members on Monday, September 19.

The report concludes that Cllr Graham Gibbens – cabinet member for adult social care – should make the final decision after taking into account the views of the adult social care and public health policy overview and scrutiny committee, which meets the following day.

A KCC spokesman said:

"Improving healthcare means people are living longer, more people need social care services than ever before, and many are choosing to live at home for as long as they can.

"However, there is less money in the public sector and less coming from central government. No-one will be asked to pay more than an assessment shows they can afford."

Rural 'not-spot' areas to miss out on £2.5bn BT broadband upgrade

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

TELECOMS giant BT says it cannot solve Kent's broadband troubles alone, despite announcing faster speeds for an additional 160,000 homes and businesses in the county.

The telecommunications firm plans to upgrade 13 more exchange areas in Kent as part of a £2.5 billion superfast-fibre broadband programme, but the funding is unlikely to benefit people currently living in rural 'not-spot' areas.

Last month Kent County Council received a £10 million grant from the Government to help, but the cash falls some way short of the £42 million needed to ensure 90 per cent of homes in the county have access to the best internet speeds.

The latest BT upgrades – which include improvements to exchanges in Gillingham, Maidstone, Ramsgate, Broadstairs and Whitstable – are due to be completed by autumn 2012.

BT South East regional director John Weaver said: "We have long said reaching the largely rural and remote 'final third' will require a partnership approach, and we welcome the fact the Government has recently allocated funding for these more challenging areas."

"BT has the strength and commitment to deliver large-scale broadband projects and

LEFT OUT: BT plans to upgrade 13 exchanges across Kent but people living in rural areas will still be left disconnected and unable to reap the benefits from superfast broadband we want to play a leading role in bringing faster technologies to our rural communities.

"As our investment demonstrates, BT is playing its part in delivering faster broadband across the UK – but there needs to be a collective effort to ensure no part of Kent is left behind."

KCC entered a bid for the full £42m from the Broadband Delivery UK fund last May but was left disappointed when the Government overlooked it in favour of three smaller bids from Norfolk, Wiltshire, and Devon and Somerset.

About seven per cent of households in Kent have no access to broadband services of any kind, while 40 per cent are unable to achieve fixed-line transfer rates of two megabits per second.

Cranbrook near Tunbridge

Wells is the worst 'not-spot' for broadband in the UK, with download speeds up to five times slower than the national average.

But despite the gloomy outlook, Cllr Roger Gough, KCC cabinet member for business strategy, said the BT funding was a step in the right direction.

He added: "The arrival of superfast broadband is a very important development and represents a significant investment for Kent."

"This news further supports KCC's ongoing commitment to ensure homes and businesses in the area have access to the benefits of next-generation broadband connections."

The BT upgrades will take the number of Kent homes and businesses benefiting from superfast broadband to more than 500,000.

Syrup sticking point for motorists after spillage on the A20

DRIVERS were left in jam after a lorry spilt its load of syrup across the busy A20 between Ashford and Hythe.

The accident took place at around 3am on Thursday and resulted in the road being temporarily closed while the emergency services faced a sticky clean-up operation.

Peter McDermott, who runs mobile food outlet Posh Pete's Burger Van near the scene of the accident, explained: "Everybody's been stopping and asking 'are we doing pancakes this morning?'"

"But what is odd, is the lorry driver was still in his cab – he had the curtains drawn, music playing and he wouldn't open up even for the police."

Council workers used spades to shovel sand onto the affected road area, while others jokingly pretended to sip from the ruptured tanks.

Tree surgeon caused worker's horrific injury

A TREE surgeon has been fined after an employee suffered severe injuries when his trouser leg was caught in a tree stump grinder.

Davyd Dyer, 30, suffered a broken leg, severe muscle injuries and was hospitalised for several weeks when his employer, Richard Curteis, left the machine running without being at the controls.

Curteis, trading as Aspen Tree Services, was prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive over the incident on September 29, 2010.

He pleaded guilty to breaching the Health and Safety at Work Act and was fined £5,000 and ordered to pay costs of £3,679.

The injuries Dyer's sustained mean it is uncertain whether he will be able to continue working as a tree surgeon.

HEALTH

Obesity league of shame reveals overeating crisis in two districts

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

SHOCKING new figures have exposed the increasing problem of obesity in parts of Kent where almost a third of adults are overweight.

Medway and Swale were named and shamed in a Department of Health survey as two of four local authorities in the country with worrying obesity levels, well above the national average of 23 per cent.

The average level predicted across Britain by 2030 is 30 per cent – but the two Kent areas have already reached the staggering figure.

Dr Alison Barnett, director of public health for Medway, admitted that although obesity was a countrywide issue, the estimated figures showed that Medway had a particularly high rate.

She said the trust was trying to combat the problem with specialist weight management courses, exercise referral schemes and holistic one-to-one support.

"We also do preventative work with young children and families," she said.

"This includes MEND (Mind, Exercise, Nutrition, Do It!) schemes for children and their families, community food projects, and we are working with schoolchildren through the Our Medway: Counting Down to 2012 project to make healthy eating and activity integral parts of the primary school curriculum."

Jonathan Sexton, assistant director of public health for Canterbury and Swale, said: "Obesity is a complex problem to tackle because very often unhealthy habits have become a way of life.

"High levels of obesity are often found in areas of deprivation and are also linked to a person's emotional well-being and mental health.

"NHS Kent and Medway has been working hard to tackle levels of adult obesity in Swale and commissions a range of services that can help support people to lose weight."

In adults, a person is considered obese if their bodyweight is at least 20 per cent higher than it should be.

If Body Mass Index (BMI), a measure derived from height and weight, is between 25 and 29.9 a person is considered overweight and if 30 or more, obese.

According to NHS figures, obesity has tripled in England in the last 20 years.

Last month it was revealed that child obesity in Dartford was at a shocking level with 22.7 per cent of year six pupils – aged 10-11 – considered obese, much higher than the national average of 18.7 per cent.

The number was also high in Gravesham, at 19.9 per cent.

A spokesman from NHS West Kent said the trust was working with Dartford and Gravesham councils to invest in a healthy living scheme.

Clegg won't take

Pictures: PAUL JERRETT

LIB DEM leader Nick Clegg is refusing to take the blame for his party's disastrous collapse at last May's local elections.

Support for the party crumbled in districts across Kent, with councillors losing six seats each in Canterbury and Shepway, five in Sevenoaks and four in Medway.

Mr Clegg has been heavily criticised for his role alongside the Conservatives in the Coalition, and for backing controversial policies such as the increase in university tuition fees.

But following a private meeting with party supporters in Maidstone, the Deputy Prime Minister told KoS he was not solely to blame for the drop in support.

"We took a collective decision to enter into a coalition," he said. "It wasn't just me deciding on my own; we all met in a great big warehouse and voted on it."

"Of course, I understand how painful it is when councillors lose their seats, particularly through no fault of their own, but do I think it was wrong to step up to the plate and put national interests before the party's? No I don't."

"Just because we're having a hard time one year does not mean we will continue to do so forever. It was always inevitable that a party used to being in opposition was going to have its ups and downs in Government, but we are still in the early stages and I sense that even people angry with the Coalition do at least accept there are no quick fixes for whoever is in power."

UNDER FIRE: Nick Clegg believes the public understand difficult decisions have to be made

A Lib Dem report due to be discussed at the party's annual conference in Birmingham this weekend concludes that Mr Clegg's decision to call a referendum on the voting system on the same day as the local elections backfired disastrously.

It said that the double poll took media airtime away from the elections and allowed Labour supporters to "kick the party twice".

blame for Lib Dem failures

During a visit to meet party faithful in the county, leader Nick Clegg tells Steve Knight he will not take sole responsibility for the Lib Dems' collapse in May's local elections and says it is time to look to the future

The failed referendum was one of many issues discussed at Maidstone's Grange Moor Hotel last week – a meeting originally scheduled for last month but which was put back as a result of the riots.

"I wanted to keep my word and come to Kent because the Liberal Democrats have been through a rollercoaster ride over the last year," said Mr Clegg.

"We've had to make a lot of difficult and down-right unpopular decisions but I think we are doing the right thing for the long-term benefit of the country.

"It's important to listen to people's concerns so as we move on over the next four years we get things right."

There are currently no Liberal Democrat MPs in Kent, nor have there ever been any. However, the Lib Dems are the main opposition party to the Conservative-led Kent County Council and maintain a healthy presence in several district councils despite the loss of seats at the local elections.

Some local activists believe the party should focus more on local government success than in Parliament, but Mr Clegg said he did not think the two were separable.

"If you win council seats then it's easier to win seats in Westminster, and vice versa," he said.

"We've taken a huge knock in Kent but it's time to dust ourselves down and move forward confidently together."

 Making a lasting difference

SOLDIERS from the county have taken on a complete change of scene and duties this summer, heading almost as far south as you can get before reaching Antarctica.

Members of Woolwich-based 2nd Battalion Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment have travelled 'down south' for tough training in the mountains and valleys of the Falkland Islands, off the coast of South America.

Battalion members, known as 'The Tigers', are taking their turn as the islands' Roulement Infantry Company (RIC), providing security during a four-month stint in the harsh Falklands winter.

Eight thousand miles from UK, on the other side of the world, they have been helping guarantee the islands' safety during the battalion's first detachment to the Falklands since 2006.

The battalion recruits heavily from Kent and across the South East, and the regimental headquarters are at Howe Barracks in Canterbury.

In UK their primary role is public duties in London, providing ceremonial guards for Buckingham Palace, the Tower of London and St James's Palace, among other glamorous locations.

However, they recently swapped ceremonial uniforms for combat kit and cold weather clothing to cope with the driving winds, snow and heavy rain of the Falklands winter – a far cry from the sunshine of the Royal Wedding where they were street liners.

Pomp and pageantry have given way to their current role to provide a 'Quick Reaction Force', guard security installations, patrol across the islands, and maintain a powerful British presence.

In line with British Government policy, British forces remain in the islands following the 1982 Falklands conflict, to help guarantee the islands' safety and support the islanders' wish to remain UK sovereign territory. The 1,200-strong British Forces Garrison, which makes up British Forces South Atlantic Islands, is based at Mount Pleasant Complex, 27 miles from the capital, Stanley.

At the same time, the Falklands, with their daunting terrain and challenging climate provide a superb training environment for all three services, which will stand any British soldier in good stead for operational service in Afghanistan.

The rugged mountains, extensive moorlands, wild ocean and remote beaches offer fantastic potential for realistic exercises, helping to hone their versatility, above all operating in harsh winter weather, compared with the sweltering summers of Afghanistan. The Battalion saw service there in 2008-09, winning several awards for bravery.

Within relatively short distances, the infantrymen have found themselves thrust into demanding tactical scenarios, including live firing, patrolling across mountains and valleys, conducting beach landings, and practising helicopter-borne assaults. There has also been the chance to work with the RAF's latest Typhoon jets, 'spotting' targets for them during exercises.

The stay has by no means been all work, however. They have had the chance to get close up to the exotic wildlife on remote beaches, including penguins and sea lions, tour the islands' old-world capital Stanley, and visit the battlefields where their Army predecessors fought the conflict nearly 30 years ago.

Following their return to UK, the Tigers will get a spot of leave, before returning to public duties in London and preparing for next year's challenges: supporting the Queen's Diamond Jubilee and London 2012 Olympics.

'The harder we train, the more effective we are operationally'

A SHEERNESS lance corporal is among troops from Kent who have 'headed for the hills' in a complete change of scene and duties.

Lance Corporal Nicholas Butcher, 26, the son of Nicholas and Marie Butcher, serves with the 2nd Battalion Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment.

This summer, he and battalion colleagues travelled 'down south' as part of the Islands' Roulement Infantry Company.

Nicholas attended Minster College before joining the Army in 2005 and since then has been to Afghanistan, Cyprus, jungle training in Belize and Army skiing in France. He and his wife Jo have two children, Esmay and Renea.

He said: "The harder we train the more effective we are operationally, and the Falklands provides a superb training environment.

"They also offer a great chance to see some unique wildlife and tour round the islands."

Nicholas is pictured on patrol at a remote Falklands settlement, providing a reassuring presence to the locals.

'It's been an amazing experience'

PRIVATE Liam Horgan, 20, says his trip to the Falkland Islands has been "an amazing experience".

Liam, whose parents Jim and Bev Horgan live in Sturry, was educated at Canterbury High School before joining the Army in 2008.

During his Armed Forces career Liam has served in Afghanistan and Cyprus, as well as a detachment to Italy. In his spare time he enjoys fishing.

The Army is a family career, with his brother James also serving with the Battalion, and being in the Falklands for a different part of the Roulement.

Liam said: "It has been an amazing experience. The weather was bitterly cold and we have had some excellent training, operating in harsh conditions across really difficult terrain. And it has been a great chance to see a really different part of the world."

Liam is pictured high up in the Falklands hills after a heli-borne training exercise to deal with some suspected mock aggressors, with both snow-capped peaks above and the South Atlantic below in view.

'Challenge motivates my soldiers'

AN ARMY officer from Deal has been getting to grips with the remote wastes and tough terrain of the Falkland Islands.

Lieutenant Jamie Thomas, 25, son of Steven and Gloria Thomas of Deal, serves as a platoon commander with the 2nd Battalion Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment.

Jamie attended Cranleigh School before being commissioned last year. Training has included the steamy jungles of Belize, a far cry from the snowy Falklands.

He said: "Although we are now moving towards the Falklands spring, it was the coldest I have ever known it up in the mountains and a real challenge motivating my soldiers, but it does teach us the vital need for teamwork and personal skills to cope in the difficult conditions."

Jamie is pictured at a live firing range deep in the Falklands mountains.

'Really tough but the training's worthwhile'

PRIVATE Luke Docwra, 25, is on security and protection duties 8,000 miles from home.

The son of Nicola Thomas, of Margate, he went to Thanet College then worked as a chef before joining up in 2008.

He has served in Afghanistan and Cyprus, and this year he has taken part in ceremonial duties in London, including the Royal Wedding. In his spare time he enjoys scuba diving and cooking.

Luke said: "The harsh conditions and long distances on foot in the hills have made it really tough but worthwhile training.

"We don't get these kind of training opportunities often, practising our winter skills across such varied and difficult terrain. The Falklands are a challenging environment, in any season."

Charity denies putting saved foxes in danger

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

AN ANIMAL welfare charity has fired back at pro-hunting campaigners who claim the organisation is putting foxes' lives in danger.

The internet-only Fieldsports Channel claims to have footage which proves injured foxes nursed back to health by the Pembury-based Fox Project have been released near a free-range chicken run in woodland near Maidstone.

Presenter Charlie Jacoby says the predators will die as a result of the practice, either through being shot by angry farmers or starvation due to them not knowing how to hunt.

However, Fox Project director Trevor Williams denied the allegations and says footage on the site is of a foster pen that foxes were not released from.

He added: "The Fox Project does not have a release pen in Maidstone, nor do we release where there is vulnerable live-stock. It's illogical – why would we invest time and money raising cubs on the bottle only to release them where we might expect them to be shot or snared?

"We do, however, have foster pens situated in the broader area, where cubs are raised remotely by rural householders, farmers and smallholders in order to maintain their wildness prior to transfer to designated release sites.

"These pens can only be reached or seen by someone deliberately trespassing deeply onto private land and not by an innocent dog walker who just happens to have both still and video cameras on his person, and who knows precisely which publications might be interested in the results."

The Fieldsports Channel is a half-hour weekly internet show about hunting, shooting and fishing in Britain.

Earlier this year TV property expert Phil Spencer, from Littlebourne, near Canterbury, was branded a "bloodthirsty killer" for shooting a deer in front of the website's cameras.

Mr Jacoby said instances of foxes being released near live-stock happen "over and over again" in the countryside.

He added: "Releasing foxes in the countryside is nuts; releasing them next to a free-range chicken run is dangerously idiotic; and feeding them on dog food before you do so is just plain cruel.

"It's not a nice thing to say, but there are lots of foxes. Our responsibility to pets is to the individual pet, but with foxes we are talking about wildlife.

"Our responsibility to wildlife is to the whole species, and foxes do not need restocking."

RIOTS

Internet porn root of riots, says MP

INTERNET pornography has been blamed for contributing to the "moral erosion" that caused last month's riots.

Sittingbourne and Sheppey Conservative MP Gordon Henderson said unrestricted access to the web and a lack of parental responsibility had created an "everything is free" mentality among a minority of young people.

The grandfather-of-seven is member of a cross-party group which last week announced the launch of a Parliamentary inquiry into online child protection.

He said: "The danger of the internet is the slow seeping of access to porn images that slowly erodes the moral fibre of young people, which in turn adds to social problems.

"Much of what we saw with the rioting and looting was due to a breakdown in morality.

"Easy access to the internet just reinforces the message everything's free and you never have to work for anything."

Mr Henderson added parents also needed to take more responsibility in monitoring their children's internet activity.

The inquiry will take evidence from parents, child protection experts, internet gurus, and bosses of Britain's largest internet providers. The group will report its findings to Government in November.

HOMES IN FRANCE

Hop across the Channel for a property bargain

DESPITE the worldwide economic uncertainty, recent figures suggest the British dream of moving abroad is still very much alive and kicking.

According to the latest report from Rightmove Overseas, during the month of July searches for overseas properties by Brits topped the two million mark for the first time in the property portal's history.

And our neighbours across the Channel still enjoy huge popularity, with three spots in the report's top-10 climbers being taken by France: Aude, Calvados and Hérault enjoyed large hikes in their searches of 52.51 per cent, 52.02 per cent and 47.10 per cent respectively.

And, although the huge gulf in British and French property prices may have narrowed slightly in the past decade, your money will still go a lot further in France.

According to UK property search website www.home.co.uk, in the month of May the average selling price of houses in Kent was £234,742, with a detached house costing, on average, £374,653.

This contrasts starkly with the average price of a resale home in France, which currently stands at €163,000 (at the current exchange rate of €1.13 to the pound, this is equivalent to around £143,440).

So, looking at French property website, www.francepropertyshop.com, there are some fantastic propositions across the Channel for the price of the average property in Kent (around €264,953). In ever-popular Brittany, you could get a six-bed renovated property with more than 14 acres of land, stables, garage and a barn. Even in the sun-kissed region of Languedoc-Roussillon, €257,000 would get you a four-bed villa with a pool.

Anne Mizrahi, of property agent Latitudes, says of French property: "It is a buyer's market: lots of properties are on offer and prices are more down to earth, there is also the possibility to negotiate."

So, if you're thinking of embarking on a life in France, you could be perfectly placed to pick up a bargain before prices start rising again. A great place to start your journey would be the French Property Exhibition on September 23-25 at London's Olympia.

At the exhibition, visitors can also the possibility to negotiate."

RELIGION

Schoolchildren haven't got a prayer

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

PRAYERS, hymns and parables have long been a staple of English school life no matter how religious the schoolchildren or their parents actually are.

Yet according to new research, almost two-thirds of pupils do not attend a daily act of collective worship as Government legislation requires.

The BBC study also reveals that 60 per cent of people are not in favour of enforcing the law to ensure young people continue to receive regular messages from the Bible.

Director of education at the Diocese of Canterbury, the Reverend Nigel Genders, said that it would be a mistake to do away with religion in schools entirely.

He said: "In a Church of England school, the worship and the coming together of pupils and staff is a means of underpinning the values of Christianity and of telling the stories those beliefs are based on."

"I would argue that those values are strong enough for the whole community, and not just church schools. You can't force anyone to worship but what we would encourage is a period of time to reflect on the meaning of life, on other people and of the universe.

"Children who have a broader understanding of the world often do better than those who focus solely on curriculum subjects like English and maths."

"People should have the opportunity to be exposed to other views and understand what in our country has been a long heritage of Christian tradition that we have built on."

According to the study – carried out by the research and polling organisation ComRes – families without children in the household (39 per cent) feel more strongly than those with children (30 per cent) that the requirement for a daily act of worship in schools should be enforced.

Older people are also more likely to want it enforced, with 51 per cent of over-65s compared to just 29 per cent of 18-24-year-olds.

Ian Bauckham, head teacher of Bennett Memorial Diocesan School in Tunbridge Wells, told the BBC he thought the law was out of date as schools had neither the time nor the space to hold daily acts of collective worship.

But he added: "It would be completely wrong to say 'let's get rid of them altogether because they don't fit our modern world'. That would be misguided and would be like throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

"You also have to recognise that people who work in schools have found a lot of subtle and sensitive ways to respond to people's backgrounds."

"I don't think many would be so crass as to give lots of prayers in a school where the majority come from different backgrounds."

"That would just be stupid."

POLITICS

Education chief steps down

KENT County Council's cabinet member for education – Cllr Sarah Hohler – has resigned after two years in the job.

In a letter to the county's headteachers, Cllr Hohler explained that she felt it was "sensible" for the authority to introduce new political leadership to support the incoming corporate director of education, learning and skills, Patrick Leeson.

She added that the demands of the job were making it increasingly difficult for her to enjoy her life away from the role.

Cllr Hohler, who will continue to represent the Malling North ward at county hall, has been replaced by her former deputy, Cllr Mike Whiting.

She said: "This is the right time to move on. We have successfully established a new education, learning and skills directorate following our decision to separate education from children's social care."

"A new senior management structure is being put in place to support the new director who joins us in a few weeks' time. It seems to me to be sensible that we take the opportunity to introduce new political leadership to work alongside the officer team as our education services enter the next phase of their development."

"The education field has been moving at a rapid pace both locally and nationally with the creation of new academies, changes to the funding schemes, reviews to the curriculum and the way performance is recorded and the need to find significant financial savings."

"The demands upon my time have therefore been steadily rising and I have found it increasingly difficult to find the time to do the things I enjoy outside the world of education."

"I am delighted the leader (Cllr Paul Carter) has appointed Mike Whiting to succeed me in this role and I wish him well. He brings youth and energy to the role and has worked well with me as my deputy this year."

GOODBYE: Cllr Sarah Hohler

Building up a bleak future

The countryside and greenbelt are under threat from the Government's new planning framework proposals, argues Protect Kent's Jamie Weir

THE National Planning Policy Framework: A developers' dream and a conservationists' nightmare.

I'd imagine that none of you will have read the National Planning Policy Framework (NPPF).

If you have a spare few hours and don't mind reading fairly large and dry documents, then I'd advocate working your way through it, because to be quite honest if you read it first-hand I have no doubt the document itself will put more of a compelling case against the NPPF than I ever could by simply telling you about its contents.

This is a document that is not grounded in the planning system, nor has any real care or respect for the countryside.

It is essentially a message from the Chancellor George Osborne that developers have carte blanche to coat our beautiful landscapes in concrete.

By moving to a planning system that is significantly weaker than our current one, and which resembles that of Greece and Ireland, are we really expected to believe it is going to help the economy and environment of our nation?

I'll let you answer that question for yourself.

This document is going to be incredibly damaging to our countryside in many ways.

It will require local authorities in Kent and across the country to allocate significantly more land for housing than is actually necessary.

In places such as Tunbridge Wells, the planning minister Greg Clark's own constituency, this will likely require the local authority to either build on greenbelt land, or otherwise 'redraw' these boundaries.

There are already ominous rumblings that this may happen in a number of places within Kent.

However, whilst the greenbelt is likely to suffer, much of CPRE Protect Kent's concern is grounded in the fact that 'ordinary' unprotected countryside will be excessively threatened by this new planning document.

This is due to the proposed presumption in favour of "sustainable" development.

This essentially means that local authorities will be required to ensure their plans are focused on economic development with little regard to whether the consequences will be sustainable or appropriate.

Where a local plan is "absent, silent, indeterminate or... out of date" they will be expected to grant planning permission.

George Osborne recently said that the "default answer to development is 'yes'" and the NPPF will require that this principle holds true regardless of how damaging the proposal is.

6699

This will decimate much of our historic landscape for little or even no gain

While many developers and the National Home Builders Federation will argue that the NPPF will help with the housing crisis, it will not.

This is simply because banks aren't lending currently, and not because the market is under-supplied.

The National Planning Policy Framework will simply lead to the decimation of many of our beautiful, historic and cherished landscapes for very little and potentially no gain, and this is why we must oppose it with all of our resources.

After all, the last time an industry (banking) was insufficiently regulated it led to one of the worst economic melt downs in history.

Next time it could be worse. Please help us keep Kent beautiful by emailing your MP from this link:

KOS COMMENT

MP musical chairs is not a game for voters

WHILE many MPs welcome the planned reduction in Parliamentary seats, it would be wrong to assume their constituents feel the same way.

A number of Kent politicians have served their communities for several years – one for almost 40 – so the shifting of electoral wards from one place to the other is bound to have an impact.

It will be fascinating to see how voters respond to these forced changes come the next general election.

Will family shame fuel comic's hatred?

BACK in 2008, comedian Alan Carr claimed the people of Maidstone were sexist, racist and homophobic.

While it is unknown if his views are any different today, his return to the county town for the filming of Who Do You Think You Are? gave him yet another reason to dislike the place.

Because of all the places to receive proof his great-grandfather was a war deserter, Maidstone was it. It might be while before there's another visit.

Sign animal export petition

The National Farmers Union claims animals exported for slaughter are well treated.

Why then are the RSPCA and Compassion in World Farming, as well as the majority of the public, calling for an end to this trade? Because it is barbaric and should never have been allowed to resume. These animals can go without food, water or rest for up to 70 hours, only to end up being brutally slaughtered abroad.

Slavery and child labour were allowed by law not much more than 150 years ago in this country. People were enslaved because of the colour of their skin and children as young as six were sent down the mines or worked 12 or 14 hours a day in factories.

The arguments to defend these abominations were similar to those used today to try to justify the cruel exploitation of animals, such as the live exports. "It would be bad for the economy to stop; it would put people out of work; they are treated well, etc".

Yet slavery and child labour eventually became illegal. And so must the live exportation of animals. Not just from Ramsgate, but from everywhere.

It is not about animals being cuddly as the NFU spokesman says, it is about stopping the terrible suffering they endure when exported live for slaughter. So please everyone, sign the online petition now and help reach the 100,000 signatures, enabling the subject to be debated in the House of Commons as quickly as possible.

Vivien Clifford, by email

We need real leadership

While understanding RE Tucker's sentiments, getting rid of Cameron's excuse for his inaction, ie, the Liberals, will make little difference (Letters, September 4).

Weak, wet, Cameron, the self-confessed Blair number two, is running true to form, large on committing our troops to yet more foreign adventures and small on carrying out his election promises.

Still nothing on the EU, on immigration and the ever-increasing quangos.

Just one quango's salary would keep 10 families, pay for 10 teachers, 10 nurses, or fund our troops who are being culled at the moment.

We need a leader with guts and vision, who cares about us and this country. Not useless, brainless, time-serving career politicians, whose only ability is to continue petty and pointless arguments over trivia.

We need somebody like Nigel Farrage. The truth glows in him like a beacon and he's got the guts to stand up for it.

Let's have a general election and turf out the deadbeats ruining this country, ignoring what we want them to do and feathering their nests.

Phil Granger, West Malling

MPs – stop the health bill

An open letter to MPs Julian Brazier and Roger Gale.

At the annual meeting of our forum last week, much concern was expressed in regard to the Health and Social Care Bill which is making its way through Parliament.

We wish to express our deep concern about your government's proposals in regard to so many aspects of this bill, and your support for it.

Five hundred GPs have signed a petition for the bill to be withdrawn, and the medical practitioners union said it is wrong when David Cameron says health service professionals were "right behind" the so called "reforms". The BMA, the Royal College of Nursing, the Royal College of Midwives, and many health care professionals also oppose the bill.

The changes to the bill have left it more complex, more costly and less likely to help the NHS meet the financial and service challenges it faces.

The Government's reasons for a re-organisation of the NHS, and claims the NHS is failing, and that its health outcomes are worse than comparable countries need to be challenged. These claims have been refuted by people both in and outside the NHS.

The Government denies the NHS changes are about privatisation but the majority of the bill is concerned with increasing competition within health care, opening up the NHS to competition law and enabling "any qualified provider" to bid for contracts.

Many of the providers looking to get contracts are private companies, including several from the USA.

Already a number of commissioning groups have outsourced local commissioning to US companies, and just today we read the Department of Health is considering handing over the running of up to 20 hospitals to overseas companies.

Also, many of those advising the Government represent private health interests.

Private health companies will be able to take new NHS commissioning groups to court if they don't win contracts. Scarce public money could be tied up in legal wrangles instead of hospital beds. Meanwhile, the legislation lifts the cap on NHS hospitals filling beds with private patients.

All of this supports the argument being made by the BMA and many others that the bill aims to change the NHS to "a market-based healthcare system similar to that operating in the USA". If this is the case, it would be a tragedy for us.

Administrative costs in the US system are seven per cent, double that in the NHS. If we follow them down the road of a market in healthcare with increasing involvement of the private sector it will deliver less healthcare and cost us more as a nation.

Improvements in healthcare are constantly needed, this has never been in question; but the NHS is capable of delivering such improvements and therefore it is hard to understand why such a radical reorganisation to the NHS is even being contemplated.

Bearing in mind the concern across the country at the aims of this bill, we ask you to reconsider your support for it.

Anne Belworthy
Chair Canterbury and District Pensioners' Forum

Speak up on your NHS care

In this time of sweeping changes to health services, members of the Concern for Health in East Kent (CHEK) committee have recently met under chairman David Shortt.

CHEK was established in 1999, representing public involvement in health matters. While some services were lost, it successfully campaigned to stop the downgrading of the Kent and Canterbury hospital to the proposed 46-bedded care of the elderly and minor injuries unit.

CHEK committee is aware of public concern surrounding the possible permanent loss of births taking place in both the Canterbury and Dover midwifery-led birthing centres. It encourages the public to attend the Maternity Choices meeting at the Business School at the University of Kent on September 23, from 7-9pm.

The public is also encouraged to attend the AGM of the East Kent Hospitals' University NHS Foundation Trust on September 27, at 6pm in the Harris Room at the Kent County Cricket Club. At this meeting there will be the opportunity for questions to be asked of the Trust Board.

CHEK would like to know, preferably by email, of highly valued local health service provision that could be under threat of change. These include increases in waiting times and access to services both in hospital and the community.

Confusion over the index-linked choice

Q I HAD intended to invest in index-linked National Savings certificates, which you recommended, but on the Post Office website I found there are two different schemes. One is for three years and the other is for five years. I could invest in either, so which offers the best return?

A Confusing, isn't it? And to add to the confusion, neither of the two schemes you found is the one that I recommended recently – though I am sure lots of people will assume that because the Post Office is involved, the two index-linked investments must be backed by National Savings. So, here are the headline rates of return. The five-year bond from the Post Office will pay you the rate of inflation as measured by the retail prices index (RPI), plus an annual 1.5pc. The three-year bond is the same except that the annual top-up is 0.5pc. National Savings index-linked certificates run for five years and are linked to the RPI, and their annual top-up is also 0.5pc. So, on the face of it, the five-year investment with the Post Office is streets ahead. It has the same index-linking as National Savings, but offers 1pc more than the National Savings top-up. However, this is not the whole picture. The bonds being marketed by the Post Office actually come from the Bank of Ireland and like any other bank investment, interest is taxable. But National Savings certificates come from the Government and the return is completely tax-free. This makes a huge difference if you are a taxpayer. For example, let's suppose inflation is 5pc, you invest £10,000, and you pay tax at the basic rate. The Post Office bonds would pay you a total of 6.5pc, or £650, less tax of £130, leaving you with £520. The National Savings certificates, on the other hand, would pay you only £550 – but you would keep the lot and lose nothing to the taxman. So, if you pay tax, choose National Savings.

Q MY SON goes to university in a few years. I have an endowment policy that matures next year that I can put towards his fees. Please advise me on the best savings account to earn some interest until the money is needed, and on the best way to earmark it so it would not be part of my estate for inheritance tax, while not simply gifting the money to my son and risking it being used for other purposes.

A WHAT you would like is to separate yourself from the money for tax purposes, yet retain control over it. A trust fund might achieve some of this, but legal costs would probably outweigh the gains. Or you could give the money to a trusted friend, with a nod and a wink to say you rely on them to see your son right. But suppose they disappear, or die and leave your money to someone else? Either way, there is a tax problem. If you make a major gift, you need to survive for seven years. Die sooner, and it still counts as yours for inheritance tax. As your son goes to university just a few years from now, you are already too late to beat this seven-year rule. Keeping the cash yourself will be far simpler. You could take out a small life insurance policy to cover inheritance tax, if that is a serious worry. Nobody can predict next year's best savings account today, but if interest rates are still low, you could even consider premium bonds. Money would be easily accessible whenever fees are due, and you (or your son) might even strike it lucky.

TONY HETHERINGTON

Q I HAVE a small pension pot from a previous job, and now I am now self-employed, I would like to use this to kick-start a self-invested personal pension (Sipp) plan, but charges look awfully high.

A CHARGES for Sipp's vary enormously. Consider Alliance Trust (www.alliancetrustsavings.co.uk) or Hargreaves Lansdown (www.hl.co.uk). Both are at the cheap end of the market and ideal for modest sums.

Q MY PARTNER and I applied for a mortgage to buy a leasehold flat, but were refused as the lease has only 60 years left. Do all banks have the same policy?

A THE flat would be security for the loan and as the lease gets closer to running out, the lender's security becomes worth less. That is why lenders are wary of short leases. As a rough guide, anything under about 70 years is hard to mortgage. A local mortgage broker may find you something. Alternatively, see if the freeholder might sell some extra years to add to the lease and then try again for a mortgage.

ON THE ROAD TO SAVINGS: Heating oil is expected to cost more for people who wait until the winter

Buy now before heating oil prices rise

PEOPLE who use heating oil to warm their homes and their water supply have been given a pre-winter warning to buy before prices rise.

They have also been reminded of other tactics to reduce the cost of their next tank of oil, the price of which has shot up in the past few years.

Households which rely on heating oil, often in rural areas, can join a group buying oil club to put pressure on suppliers to bring their prices down in return for a sizable order.

But the key step is to stock up in late summer or early autumn when prices tend to be lower and when suppliers are better able to deliver more quickly.

Around 1.5 million UK households use heating oil as their primary source of heat, making it the most commonly used source of off-grid energy for heating homes.

Gillian Guy, chief executive at Citizens Advice, said: "With the double hazard of another harsh winter predicted and the soaring cost of heating oil, we are concerned at the number of people we see who are anxious about staying warm through the freezing winter months, as many can't afford the high costs of heating bills.

"Our evidence suggests the best way for people living off-grid to get the best deal is to buy as early as possible, and join a collective purchase initiative like an oil club."

Pension fears of today's employees

By Ed Foss

MyMoney 24 writer

PENSIONS confusion has led people into a "crisis of confidence" as they consider their retirements.

Employees are deeply concerned about the future, with only two out of five feeling they are doing enough to prepare financially for their retirement. Confidence about retirement prospects is lowest amongst the 21 to 45-year age group, according to research by Mercer.

Asked if their organisations were doing enough to help them prepare for retirement, only 35pc declared themselves satisfied, with the remainder either unsatisfied or unsure.

Jenny Condron, a partner at Mercer, said: "Concern about retirement is fuelled in part by media attention on pensions in the private and public sector and a raft of other social and financial pressures facing employers and employees.

"Our report findings are interesting, yet contradictory. On the one hand, employees are happy with their company-provided plans yet they lack confidence about their own readiness. This may be related to age and financial education."

Senior managers are much more confident they are doing enough to prepare for their retirement compared with non-management staff.

Senior management is also more likely to express satisfaction with company pension plans compared with non-management, and more likely to agree employers are doing enough to help them prepare for retirement.

"There may also be age-related factors at play here," said Mrs Condron.

"Younger employees are far less likely to feel secure about their retirement or to know what might be needed compared with older employees who have years of preparation behind them.

"Historically, people have tended to underestimate how much they need to save for retirement while overestimating what their pension plans will provide in real terms. Our report suggests that this optimism is ebbing. For employers, this lack of confidence should be addressed. Companies should communicate the excellent work that they do to support their staff in their retirement.

"Without this, businesses get too little value for their, often material, pension spend."

Ray Chinn, head of pensions at LV=, said: "Where possible, people should make as much provision for retirement as they can, through their own pension savings or other investments.

"Those who will be impacted by the changes and do have their own pensions savings should consider taking financial advice to ensure they can maximise their retirement income and make up any shortfall in state pension, which could include options such as enhanced annuities, income drawdown or equity release."

Bank's lending clinics have clear message: we're open for business

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

COMPANIES should not be afraid to ask banks to borrow cash according to representatives from Barclays who say they are "open for business".

The bank is holding a consultation and advice session on Wednesday with members of the workforce from Pfizer who have been laid off, as well as offering help for entrepreneurs who want to obtain finance at its Gravesend branch on Monday, October 24, and in Ashford at the North Street Management Suite three days later.

Across the UK Barclays lent around £7 billion in the last year and the company say four out of every five requests for loans are approved, with the major reason for refusal insufficient guarantee that repayment schedules can be met.

Ria Barlabas is head of Barclays Business for the South East.

She said: "What we are looking for from businesses which need finance is as simple as a sound business plan, which indicates to us it is a viable concern. Across the UK we want to support small and medium enterprises. We are empathic and we understand their needs.

"There is a perception the banks are not lending money and we want to change that.

"For instance, recently there was an off-the-cuff remark from a presenter on a prime time television show who said 'banks don't lend'.

"But that is simply is not true. We are open for business. We are a bank so we are about lending money."

Barclays is encouraging customers to attend its lending clinics which involve giving advice on what businesses need to prepare when they ask for money as well as finding out their specific needs.

Barlabas said: "Although four out of five requests for loans are granted the doors are not closed to those we refuse. We will sit down and explain exactly why the request was turned down.

The person can then go away and think again and we actively encourage them to re-apply once their plan has been amended."

Jason Small is responsible for businesses specifically based in Kent and is working on the Pfizer seminar.

He said: "There were a lot of people with extremely valuable skills employed by that company.

"We hope that our help and advice on such things as setting up on their own will enable that talent to remain in the area, which will obviously be of great benefit to the local economy.

TK Maxx occupies last unit at Bouverie Place

AROUND 400 people queued up in Bouverie Place Shopping Centre, Folkestone, last week to visit the mall's latest store.

Fashion store TK Maxx opened its doors at 9am with £10 gift vouchers for the first 500 people through the doors. Its opening means every unit in the town centre mall is now occupied.

The centre already has a number of fashion stores including Primark, Next and New Look.

Folkestone has seen an increase in shoppers since the centre opened its doors and it has escaped the criticism of large out-of-town complexes – that they take trade away from the towns themselves.

Paul Stone, centre manager at Bouverie Place Shopping Centre said: "We are delighted to welcome TK Maxx to Bouverie Place, they provide a fantastic addition to the shopping centre.

"The opening was a great success with visitors queuing as far as Sandgate Road to get their first look in the new store."

Leaving job in the City not such a Barking Mad idea for winner Sally

SALLY Hall has celebrated her first year in business by being named the Barking Mad Newcomer of the Year.

Barking Mad offers an alter-native for dog owners who can't put their dog into kennels when they go away. It is a franchise business which was started in the Lake District by Lee Dancy who couldn't find care for her own dog.

Hall said: "We provide a home-from-home environment by arranging for customers' dogs to stay with carefully selected dog-loving host families who enjoy having dogs come to stay with them for short holidays. We provide a bespoke and professional service. I visit customers in their own homes so I can meet their dog and collect as much information as I can about the dog's routine and habits.

"I then match the dog with a suitable host family and collect the dog from its owner and deliver it to the host family. "I cover Maidstone, Medway and Sittingbourne and have registered more than 80 dogs in my first 12 months. I worked in the City for more than 20 years and wanted to do something close to my heart."

MANUFACTURING

Industry experts offer free hands-on advice

THE MANUFACTURING Advisory Service (MAS) South East is offering any Kent business involved with manufacturing production or assembly access to a free review with one of its experienced industry specialists who understands the issues affecting today's manufacturers.

The two-hour review will involve a hands-on assessment and diagnostic of the business, highlighting areas of opportunity and actions that can be implemented in order to improve operational performance.

David Caddle, programme manager for MAS South East, said: "More often than not, it just takes a fresh pair of eyes to re-focus a company. Our specialists provide impartial advice and approach every business without prejudice, meaning there are no 'sacred cows', so we can really get to the heart of an issue.

"Our whole ethos is about not just solving a problem and walking away, but about delivering sustainable improvements and changes that can be continued and developed once we've left."

Bank deal just the ticket for growing holiday firm

A MULTI-MILLION-POUND deal to help expand the Holiday Extras Group has been concluded by Clydesdale Bank in Kent, a move the company says is challenging the perception that well managed businesses are struggling to secure funding.

Holiday Extras Group, the Hythe-based company and number one pre-booked airport hotels and airport parking business in the UK has secured a £17.5 million revolving credit facility and a £7.5m bonding and guarantee facility to support its continued growth.

The company, which employs 400 people, with 300 of them based at the Holiday Extras head office, has a turnover of £200m.

Cathy Beare, group chief financial officer, said: "This deal, and the support we have received on an on-going basis from Clydesdale Bank, reinforces our belief that for well-run and well-managed businesses, there are supportive banks out there.

"The team at Clydesdale Bank, thoroughly understand our business and have been an integral part of Holiday Extras' success. The deal was pulled together swiftly and professionally, with everybody working late into the night.

Paul Saunders, managing partner at Clydesdale Bank's financial solutions centre in Maidstone, said: "Our relationship with the management team of Holiday Extras, led by Gavin Coleman, goes back to 2005 when it was one of the first major deals negotiated by the Kent team.

"The company has grown and increased employment throughout the recession and is now perfectly placed to benefit from the economic upturn."

The facilities were negotiated as part of Clydesdale Bank's Investing For Growth initiative and its commitment to lending £10 billion of new finance to UK business and mortgage customers by October 2011.

Entrepreneur joins stars to judge charity calendar

MAIDSTONE businesswoman Louise Morrison is joining celebrity TV presenter Emma Forbes and ITV's This Morning's agony aunt Denise Robertson to judge a national competition.

Louise launched Antenatal Online this year and the business is sponsoring the 2012 Beautiful Bumps calendar which will raise money for stillbirth charity Count The Kicks.

She will help choose the images to be used in the calendar from thousands of photographic competition entries which was judged in London on Tuesday.

Louise, who has a three-year-old daughter, Evie, said: "Antenatal Online helps parents prepare for pregnancy, labour, birth and the first weeks as a new parent.

"We wholly support the Count The Kicks charity which was set up by a mum who experienced a stillbirth.

"While I was inspired to launch my business because of my very positive birth experience, Count The Kicks founder Sophia Mason was inspired to launch her charity because of her very tragic experience of birth.

"Being aware of what to expect in pregnancy and birth can help allay fears and Count the Kicks promotes awareness of the risks of the later stages of pregnancy and signs to look out for, as do our videos."

Law expert is excited by prestigious new role

Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

JONATHAN Smithers, from CooperBurnett in Tunbridge Wells, has been named as chairman of the Conveyancing and Land Law Committee (CLLC) of the Law Society, a role he assumed on the opening day of September this year.

The CLLC has a wide ranging remit centred around the review and promotion of improvements in all branches of land law and conveyancing procedure, as well providing practical assistance and guidance to the profession.

The Committee also responds to consultation documents from outside bodies, such as the Government and the Land Registry.

"I am very excited about my new role and the opportunity it will give me to contribute towards the development of conveyancing practice during the three years of my appointment," said Smithers.

"The Conveyancing and Land Law Committee is one of the most important policy committees at the Law Society, as the work it undertakes is relevant to the overwhelming majority of solicitors' practices."

Property law continues to develop and the liberalisation of the legal market in the coming years is likely to mean more competition, so the CLLC has an important role to play in making sure solicitors are able to provide the best possible service to their clients.

The Conveyancing Quality Scheme (CQS), launched earlier in the year by the Law Society, has provided practitioners with an opportunity to demonstrate expertise. The Committee has played a central role in production of the documentation for the scheme and continues to provide advice as the scheme progresses.

The CLLC includes a senior member of the Land Registry.

"The Land Registry has gone through huge changes in the last few years, so our ability to talk directly to them and have an input into development of their policy, helps not only our members but also our clients," Smithers said.

"We are frequently consulted and asked to provide expert advice on new legislation.

"Currently, for example, we are talking to the Government about the potential impact of the changes in the planning regime contained in the Localism Bill."

DEAL-BREAKER: Free wi-fi service important

Survey highlights benefits of providing free internet access

THE average person spends 10 hours a day being connected to the internet, results from a Plusnet Business survey have revealed.

The study demonstrates how the demand for Internet access has increased, with just over one in 10 of those in Kent who took part saying that they need it to be able to update people should anything happen.

Small businesses need to take note of the fact that just over half of respondents in Kent said that internet access, provided by businesses, is needed in public areas. More than a third of said that having access to wi-fi is a deal-breaker when deciding on a hotel, showing how much this can affect a business's bottom line.

This study by the broadband supplier has uncovered how much of an impact a decent wi-fi connection for customer use can bring to many sectors, with almost a fifth across the UK saying they will purposely choose a restaurant, bar, pub and shopping centre over one without it.

Talking about the survey Nick Silverwood, head of business at Plusnet, said: "Through the survey we can see that installing something as simple as free wi-fi for customers can help generate repeat custom and definition within a market.

"With increased competition in the hospitality and retail markets, it's important for small businesses to understand how investing in customer broadband has the potential to really boost sales."

Government decision to relax equity-raising regulations may help cash-strapped SMEs

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE relaxation of equity-raising regulations will help cash-strapped SMEs, according to a leading local corporate finance adviser.

Geert Struyven, corporate finance partner at Crowe Clark Whitehill, a leading national firm offering audit, tax and business advisory services with offices in Tunbridge Wells and Maidstone, said the amendments would be of huge benefit to Kent companies.

Until recently, if a company wished to raise more than 2.5 million euros (£2.17m) through offering its securities for sale to potential investors, or wished to raise a lower amount but from a pool of more than 100 investors, it had to issue a prospectus in a form approved by the Financial Services Authority (FSA).

Production of such a prospectus is a costly and time-consuming process and led to many SMEs, put-off by the potential costs and time involved, capping their fundraising activities at the 2.5m euro limit.

In a move to stimulate growth, the Government has now doubled the fundraising threshold for a prospectus to be required, taking the ceiling to five million euros, and also increased the number of investors to whom an offer of securities may be made before such a document is required from 100m to 150m euros.

Mr Struyven said: "These changes are particularly good news for SMEs, who should now be able to access greater amounts of equity finance more cheaply and effectively, and without necessarily having to consider a quotation on a public market such as AIM.

"Companies looking to raise between 2.5m-5m euros will still have to produce documentation that is verified by their legal advisers and approved by an FSA authorised firm, such as Crowe Clark Whitehill, but the cost of producing such documentation should be significantly lower than that of producing a prospectus."

BENEFICIAL: Corporate finance adviser Geert Struyven says the changes will benefit SMEs

Businesses' gala night to aid victims of riots

COMPANIES in south-east London are joining forces to help other businesses in local communities affected by last month's riots.

Business network group, BNI South East London, which represents almost 300 small and medium-sized businesses in the area, is holding a gala dinner to raise money for victims of the riots.

The event, which is open for anybody to attend, is being held at The Warren in Hayes, Bromley, on Thursday, September 29.

The evening includes a three-course dinner, special guest speakers, music and entertainment. There will be an auction and raffle with all proceeds going directly to those worst affected.

Adèle McLay, managing area director of BNI SE London said: "The whole country witnessed the horrific events in London in August, and the devastation it caused businesses and the community as a whole. All our members are business men and women and they were very keen to find a way to help other local businesses who have suffered hardship."

Paul Young, of Millers Electrical in Anerley, is the director of the BNI group in Beckenham and responsible for organising the event.

He said: "It promises to be a fantastic night and we are delighted to be able to support people in the community who have been affected. The philosophy of BNI is 'givers gain', meaning those who give will benefit in return - this is the perfect opportunity for us to give generously."

Port welcomes young engineers

MORE than 300 students paid a visit to the Port of Dover to find out more about civil engineering.

The young people are all employees of Tony Gee and Partners, which has an office in Ashford, and were invited to the port to find out more about its expansion and upgrade plans.

"It was a pleasure to host a visit for such a large group of enthusiastic young engineers who were able to experience first-hand the management of marine and civil engineering projects in an intense operational environment," said head of engineering development Nigel Bodell.

"They were able to view the general aspects of port layout design, and it offered an ideal opportunity to explain a number of exciting and innovative future developments in Europe's busiest ro-ro port."

Tony Gee's training manager Gareth Drought added: "To enable our budding engineers the opportunity to experience first-hand the operations at Dover was beneficial in many ways. We are extremely grateful to the team for offering our students a glimpse into this fascinating world."

President selects personal projects

THE incoming president of the Institution of Civil Engineers has chosen a Whitstable woman to become one of six personal apprentices.

Lydia Walpole, 24, will work closely with Richard Coackley throughout his presidential term to observe how an influential figure in the industry operates.

She said: "I am delighted to have been selected for such a prestigious role and look forward to learning more about the workings of the ICE."

"I am currently working on the construction of the new Crossrail station at Bond Street, which is an exciting project for any young engineer. I love every aspect of my job and hope to use my role to excite and inspire young people to join the profession."

Lydia, who works for Costain, will have individual and group mentoring sessions with Mr Coackley and be involved in his initiatives throughout the year.

Mr Coackley said: "I'm looking forward to hearing their views on the many challenges facing the world today."

Project Search finds employment answer

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

A WORK programme aimed at easing students with learning disabilities into employment has celebrated the graduations of its first cohort.

The Project Search scheme combines classroom learning with work-based training and is run by Kent County Council's Kent Supported Employment team in partnership with Thanet College and East Kent Hospitals University NHS Foundation Trust.

The programme is aimed at 18-25-year-olds with learning disabilities and is based at the Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother (QEOM) Hospital in Margate, where the youngsters learn skills in a wide range of different job roles.

"We've had a successful first year and the programme has worked tremendously well," said Kathy Melling, employment development manager at Kent County Council.

"To witness the personal growth of these young people has been fantastic, and you wouldn't recognise them from when the course began. The graduation ceremony was very emotional and it was a box-of-tissues day for us all."

"A lot of people with learning disabilities have very low aspirations so it's our job to tell them they will actually succeed in life. Having that sort of belief has actually helped changed them as people."

The Project Search programme was completed by 11 young people, three of whom moved straight into a new job. The rest have all made significant improvements and will continue to receive support until they find employment.

One of the graduates is a young autistic man named

Aaron, who chose to stop talking when he was a child and uttered his first words in years as a result of his time on the course. He now acts as a spokesperson for the group.

Another named Elizabeth has Down's syndrome and although she has not yet found employment, she can travel independently for the first time and has much higher aspirations about what she will achieve in life.

Thanet College's additional learning support manager Jo Campbell said: "We have a large cohort of people with learning difficulties in the Thanet area, and people come to the college from other areas in south Kent primarily because over the years we have developed some very successful and innovative training programmes for them."

"But everyone has to be treated individually because people have their own needs and interests. Although the Project Search programme has proven very successful nationally, it's just one way of supporting people with learning difficulties and will not be suitable for everyone."

"Not everyone with a learning disability necessarily wants to work. Many just want to be able to live independently."

There are currently 14 Project Search sites in the UK, and between them they have supported more than 25 young people with learning disabilities into work.

What is your business doing to help Keep Kent Working? Do you send employees on training courses to aid their personal development or run apprenticeship schemes? If you have a good news story email steve.knight@archant.co.uk or give him a call on 01303 817136.

Campaigning students' union earns fourth accolade in as many years

CANTERBURY College's students' union has been named one of the best three in the country for the fourth year running.

It came in second at the National Union of Students' awards ceremony at Leeds University, having come first, third and second in the previous three years.

Students' union president Harry Fox said: "It's such a great achievement to be recognised by the NUS for the fourth year in a row.

"The students work really hard to make sure our voice is heard both at college and in the community."

The union's achievements over the past year include obtaining cheaper student travel to the college, improving counselling and peer mentoring services, and launching a new student magazine.

NUS judges made mention of the range of campaigns and activities the union has run, and the impact they have made on college life.

Lut Stewart, director of student support services, said: "Being nominated for four consecutive years recognises the continued inspirational, visible and active commitment to valuing all learners by the students' union."

Meanwhile, union manager Tony Payne also picked up a separate prize for 'outstanding contribution to the leadership of learners'.

Harry Potter designer to attend Anifest

A TECHNICAL wizard who helped bring the final Harry Potter films to life will speak at next month's Canterbury Anifest.

Samy Fecih, who worked as a CGI animator on both Deathly Hallows blockbusters, has been invited to attend the film festival by the University for the Creative Arts.

The event will be held at Canterbury Christ Church University's Augustine's House from September 30 to October 1.

Samy, who works for the Oscar-winning visual effects house Double Negative, said: "I'm really looking forward to speaking at Anifest with UCA. I'm a big animation fan myself so I'm as excited as everyone else to be there.

"My talk will be about my job animating the dragon on the latest Harry Potter movie. I will go into depth about my research, which took me to bats, camels and komodo dragons, and how we gave life to her.

"I want people to understand that being a good animator is not about knowing the best programmes or being technically brilliant, but more about focusing on the character; giving life to it and understanding how it moves, talks and breathes."

Samy will deliver his talk at noon on Saturday, October 1, after which he will also give his input into an 'imagineering masterclass' run by UCA Rochester's CG arts and animation course.

Senior lecturer Phil Gomm said: "We're really excited to be involved with Anifest again.

"Our masterclass will offer participants a unique insight into the essential role of concept art and 2D sketching skills that go into the design and execution of computer-generated imagery.

"They'll get to meet members of the course team and get a taste of what it might be like to study a subject they love with us at UCA Rochester.

"The introduction of higher tuition fees nationally means it's never been more important for degree courses to demonstrate the ways in which they connect with their associated industries and enrich their local communities."

Employment scheme offers ray of hope to Armed Forces personnel

ARMED Forces personnel set to lose their jobs as a result of Government spending cuts have been offered a helping hand into alternative employment.

The Institution of Engineering and Technology (IET) is launching a special package to support service leavers in working towards professional qualifications.

Armed Forces development manager Tricia Johnson said: "We wanted to get involved and help those in our Armed Forces who are facing redundancy in their resettlement to civilian life and to recognise the debt society owes them.

"Through this special discounted membership package we will support engineers, IT professionals and technicians and help them gain a professional qualification such as chartered engineer, incorporated engineer, engineering technician or ICT technician.

"This will greatly assist them in finding employment as it provides external recognition of the transferable skills they have achieved."

As part of the package, service leavers will also have access to the IET's training courses and support from its benevolent fund, as well as networking, mentoring and job opportunities. The IET has a long-standing agreement with the Career Transition Partnership, which helps about 15,000 service leavers every year.

RIC is a non selective school yet our exam results regularly exceed those of more well established - and more expensive - private schools and are comparable to the highly selective grammar schools.

We believe that our small teaching groups, regular testing and structured tutorial support are responsible for this.

*“We would like to say a huge thank you. Jack came to you less than a year ago with all C grades at AS. He now has A*AB in his A levels with a place confirmed at Warwick. We are absolutely delighted – as is he! It is particularly special for us because we met there – and got places with lower grades!”*

Dr Carrie Weston, parent of Jack, formerly of Gravesend Boys Grammar.

RIC students are celebrating places at some of the UK's top universities including three at Cambridge. Star performers include those who transferred to RIC after disappointing results elsewhere and retakers.

Aspiring vet Amelia Liddell, formerly of King's Canterbury has a place at The Royal Veterinary College. Her 2011 RIC classmates included Asha Chohan who has a place at Aston for Optometry and Louisa Garcia, from King's Rochester who will study History of Art at Birmingham

There were 14 A*s in Maths this year at RIC. Amongst those who won the top grade were Jean Michel Hurst from Cooling. He is going to Imperial to read Physics alongside Tom Parsons, formerly of Oakwood Park Grammar, who has opted for Computer Science. Guy Booth who studied A levels at RIC after GCSEs at Gad's Hill has a place for Physics at Exeter. Four of RIC's star students have places at Nottingham University. Tim Turvey formerly of TWGSB will read Mechanical Engineering. Seb Lundberg who transferred from Colfe's will study Theology. Vicky Piper who came to RIC from Epsom College has chosen Philosophy and Sophie Dunk from Gravesend Grammar, Zoology.

“This is just to say a very big ‘thank you’ to all of my son’s tutors for your superb guidance, expert management of the application for Law, unfailing kindness, patience and brilliant teaching. You taught him to think properly, to write clearly and fulfilled every promise you made to us.” Judith Wickham, parent of Alistair, formerly Invicta Grammar.

“We are delighted with Roshni's results and her place to study Medicine at St George's. This is our second daughter to attend Rochester Independent College. Our older daughter Sarina is in her final year of Dentistry at Queen Mary.” Mr and Mrs Patel, parent of Roshni, formerly Gravesend Grammar.

RIC scooped two Good Schools Guide awards for our record breaking English A level results - the best point score of any independent school in the UK.

Amazing grades, great memories

Cecelia Johnson, like so many 16 year olds across Kent, was anxiously awaiting her GCSE results this year. Uniquely however, her results were as much a landmark in the history of her school as they were important to her. While RIC students have been winning top GCSE and A level results since 1984, they have traditionally joined the Star Hill College for short intensive courses. Cecelia is the first pupil to take her GCSEs at RIC after joining at the age of 11 in Year 7.

Cecelia is celebrating 12 top GCSE results, including double A* success in English and English Literature which she is continuing at A level in RIC's sixth form, alongside Fine Art, History of Art and Sociology. Cecelia says: “I love it here and can't imagine being at school anywhere else.”

While Cecelia was the pioneer, RIC is now a first choice, non selective alternative for children in year 7. They come to us at the age of 11 from a wide variety of educational backgrounds. Some have always been in private education and join direct from prep. Others are from local primary schools. Some have passed the 11+ but choose RIC. Some have narrowly missed a grammar school place, others have opted not to take the test altogether.

For all, we offer a happy and lively atmosphere where academic success follows naturally from students being settled in their environment and engaged by enthusiastic and talented teachers. We are small enough to get to know everyone very well but large enough for good friendship groups to be formed. All class sizes are small, the average being 8.

While RIC students have ventured in the past as far as Thailand on student exchanges, 2011 saw our first trip south of the equator. A dozen of our intrepid Lower Sixth students put their long summer break to good use on an African adventure they raised the money to fund. The students travelled and trekked through Malawi and Zambia, doing community volunteer work and learning how to live and work together.

One of the most exciting extra curricular contributions comes from the Duke of Edinburgh award and involves students from Year 9 upwards, through the Lower and Middle Schools into the Sixth Form.

As well as trips locally and to Wales and Scotland students have been involved in volunteering and conservation projects. They participate in sports and music, and are currently creating an outdoor classroom. This has involved investment and partnership with Kent Wildlife Trust, giving students the opportunity to work with adults from external agencies and establish a project that will encourage wildlife, have long-term conservation value, and benefit current and future students at the College.

ROCHESTER

INDEPENDENT COLLEGE

"I was so impressed with the classes and teaching I saw and came away with a very positive view of the College, its ethos and aspirations. The priority of teaching and learning was foremost and the students projected such a positive attitude towards their studies."

Peter Read, Kent Independent Education Advice

Kent's best kept educational secret

Refreshingly different, reassuringly academic

"RIC is such a friendly place. My teachers are great and they make the lessons really interesting. There is much more discussion and practical work which is fun. It's informal but we still get lots of work done. I love being in the labs particularly when we do experiments. I want to be a GP when I grow up, working with patients and helping them." Caitlin, year 7, joined RIC from King's Rochester.

The first free schools are opening their doors for the start of term this week. RIC has been offering a great education and a world of difference from intimidatingly large, factory-model secondary schools since 1984.

Student needs are more clearly recognised and focused upon in a smaller school setting. In class sizes that average 8, pupils prosper. A smaller school size allows more opportunity for our teachers to work closely together and share information. It allows us to provide an unparalleled level of feedback to parents in regular email reports. We focus on ensuring the children who join us are happy and supported towards academic success and personal confidence.

We don't put them through the ordeal of the 11+ or an entrance exam, believing everyone is capable of succeeding in the right environment. The expectation is that all will grow in confidence and self esteem, do well academically and have great memories of school life.

Children at RIC benefit from what Ofsted describes as, "outstanding spiritual, moral and cultural development." They enjoy a colourful range of sports and clubs. Music, Art, Film and Drama, both in and out of the classroom, give a creative buzz. They perform well at GCSE but do not take an unnecessary number of exams. No one needs 16 GCSEs - half that number in the right subjects is good enough for the best universities.

RIC students aim high, work hard and behave well but are not hot housed, unduly pressured or inappropriately accelerated. As the momentum in Kent seems to be moving towards a 'bigger is best' approach and many schools are merging to create monster sized academies we are determined to continue demonstrating that small schools work best for many years to come.

"The teaching at Rochester is rigorous and tailored to the best possible exam results. It offers a broad education, combining its original focus on getting students into competitive courses such as medicine and dentistry with a new emphasis on the creative arts."

Liz Lightfoot, The Independent.

HIGHWAYS - Borough of Ashford

THE KENT COUNTY COUNCIL
(MOATFIELD MEADOW, ASHFORD)
(PUFFIN CROSSING)
ROAD TRAFFIC REGULATION ACT 1984
(FORESTALL MEADOW & MOATFIELD MEADOW) (CONVERSION OF FOOTWAY TO CYCLE TRACK)
HIGHWAYS ACT 1980
AS AMENDED BY THE CYCLE TRACKS ACT 1984

NOTICE is hereby given that the Kent County Council, in exercise of its powers under Section 23 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 and all other enabling powers, intends to convert the existing pedestrian refuge to a Puffin Crossing on Moatfield Meadow, 110 metres north east of the mid point of its roundabout junction with Forestall Meadow; and Under Section 1 of the Cycle Tracks Act 1984 and Sections 65 and 66 (1) of the Highways Act 1980 and all other enabling powers, intends to convert a footway to a cycle track of the type as described in column 1 of schedule 1 hereto, at the location described in column 2 of the same schedule.

As part of the expansion plans to an existing major store in the town it is essential to provide safe facilities for pedestrians and cyclists within the area. The proposed Puffin Crossing will be used by an increased number of school children and shoppers using the store and other nearby facilities and a high population from the surrounding residential housing estates.

The features of a Puffin Crossing include facilities to cancel pedestrian demands when they cross in the gaps in traffic and to allow for varying clearance times after the pedestrian green signal, to allow for slow pedestrians without harassment from drivers. The pedestrians in the area would therefore benefit from the introduction of a Puffin Crossing to assist with the high pedestrian movement throughout the area

Copies of the plan showing this proposal an explanatory statement and a map showing the extents of the scheme may be inspected during normal office hours at The Kent County Council Offices, Sessions House, County Road, Maidstone, Kent, ME14 1XX, and at Ashford Borough Council Offices, Tannery Lane, Ashford, Kent, TN23 1PL.

Anyone wishing to support, or object to the proposed extension to the existing cycle route should write to Mrs Diane Bourne, Jacobs Engineering UK Ltd, Miller House, Lower Stone Street, Maidstone, Kent, ME15 6GB quoting the name of the Order and reference No "B1189600" and stating their reasons, by not later than Monday 10th October 2011.

THE INTERVIEW

Drumchasers

“WE HAVE a celebrity-obsessed culture in which anyone who has been on television should be paid attention. The theatre market is being swamped with these D-list celebrities who were runners-up on X Factor and are now starring in the West End in Grease. Getting people to see brand-new shows is hard.”

So says renowned British composer and director Ethan Maltby, who brings his new musical stage show to his home county of Kent looking to storm a very competitive market.

The 35-year-old is well known around the UK for his previous touring percussion show Noise Ensemble and he is now about to unleash Drumchasers on the world.

He said: “There is not anything out there quite like it. It is kind of like a musical without singing, but drums instead. It’s basically a 10-piece percussion ensemble playing, but it has a story with characters set in another world.

“It is slightly fantasy-based, but there is no dialogue. It features an ancient battle between two tribes of warring Drumchasers, which are this other worldly race of characters who only live to drum.”

Maltby has also pulled off quite a coup by enlisting the services of a famous actor and comedian to voice a four-minute back story played during the musical.

He said: “This is not a huge production – it’s independent, so I thought wouldn’t it be great to get someone to read the narration and give it more credibility.

“People like to go to things that they can relate to. No one has ever heard of Drumchasers and no one has ever heard of me. Which is why we are really lucky Stephen Fry took pity on us for a very small amount of money and agreed to do it.

“There is something about Stephen’s voice in this fantasy world that works really well.”

The Canterbury-based composer studied at Christ Church University, where he came up with his breakthrough musical Noise Ensemble in 2004.

The show went on to play UK venues including the Southbank Centre and Wembley Stadium and on BBC’s Blue Peter as well as touring in Europe and Asia.

He said: “I was teaching percussion at Christ Church after I graduated with a degree in film. Through this I was running a percussion ensemble, so my interest was both story and visually based as well as musically based.

“We put together a group to do a show in the Canterbury Festival in 2000, and I developed

BEAT IT: The cast of Ethan Maltby’s new stage show Drumchasers, where two ancient tribes battle it out through the sound of drumming

Composer’s fantasy land beats to a different drum

Joe Bill meets Ethan Maltby, whose new show is about to hit the stage that idea into a show which I wrote from scratch, called Noise Ensemble. That ended up touring for five years.

“I was approached to put Noise Ensemble on again, but I felt it was lacking a story. People enjoyed the percussion, but they didn’t have a connection on stage and people like to be told a story and like to be moved and like to laugh.

“So that’s why I came up with this world.”

And Maltby believes the new concept has all the ingredients to become a West End mainstay, possibly dislodging other percussion shows like Stomp.

He said: “The only dialogue is the four minutes of Stephen’s back story, so in terms of international market anyone could come and see it and understand what’s going on.

“Hopefully this tour will bring more people in and take the show from strength to strength.”

Maltby is also working on several other projects, including composing the score for a new feature film.

He has also previously completed stints on Channel Four documentary Waste Man as well as composing the players’ ‘walk on’ anthems in the 2008 and 2009 FA Cup finals with his track FA Overture.

Drumchasers begins its 15-date UK autumn tour on Tuesday, September 20, when it comes to The Orchard Theatre at Dartford. It then heads to Canterbury and the new Marlowe theatre.

Maltby said: “I’ve had a couple of productions playing at the Marlowe over the last few years.

“It is really nice of them to keep taking me back. To live in Canterbury and have the show come is always great – I just hope it does well.”

■ Drumchasers will appear at The Orchard at 7.30pm on Tuesday, September 20. Tickets start at £16 and can be booked at www.orchardtheatre.co.uk or by calling the ticket office on 01322 220000. ## TALKING POINT

Planning reform

THE Coalition government's planning reforms have been among its most divisive policy proposals so far. Led by Tunbridge Wells MP and local government and communities minister Greg Clark, the major changes have not only drawn criticism from the left and environmental activists, they have also struck discord within the Tory heartland.

But, unlike the uproar over the planned forests sell-off which similarly outraged Middle England and core Conservative voters, the Government has ruled out a U-turn.

The Draft National Planning Policy Framework aims to streamline the system, slashing more than 1,000 pages down to just 52.

It also introduces a "presumption in favour of sustainable development".

This has led to concern and criticism from a growing alliance of environmental and conservation charities, including Friends of the Earth and National Trust, that the overhaul of the current system will lead to large-scale developments springing up across the countryside.

Ministers have said the change in planning laws is needed to boost economic growth and build more homes.

The National Trust has urged its 3.7 million members, including 18,564 in Tunbridge Wells, to sign a petition and write to their MP to oppose the changes. Directors from the conservation charity, which is the largest in the country, met with Mr Clark last Wednesday (September 7) at the House of Commons.

Dame Fiona Reynolds, the trust's director general, has said the reforms could lead to "unchecked and damaging development in the undersigned countryside on a scale not seen since the 1930s".

External affairs director Ben Cowell, who also met with Mr Clark, said the trust was not opposed to growth that had strong local support. But he said stalled housing developments were caused by the economy, not planning.

In Tunbridge Wells, for example, one of the town's most notorious 'grot spots' the former cinema site has stood derelict for more than a decade. The previous developer went bust after gaining planning permission for a mixed-use development of shops, housing and a hotel.

The Conservative-supporting Daily Telegraph has waded into the row launching a Hands Off Our Land campaign to urge ministers to rethink the proposals, joining the National Trust, English Heritage and the Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE) in opposing the plans.

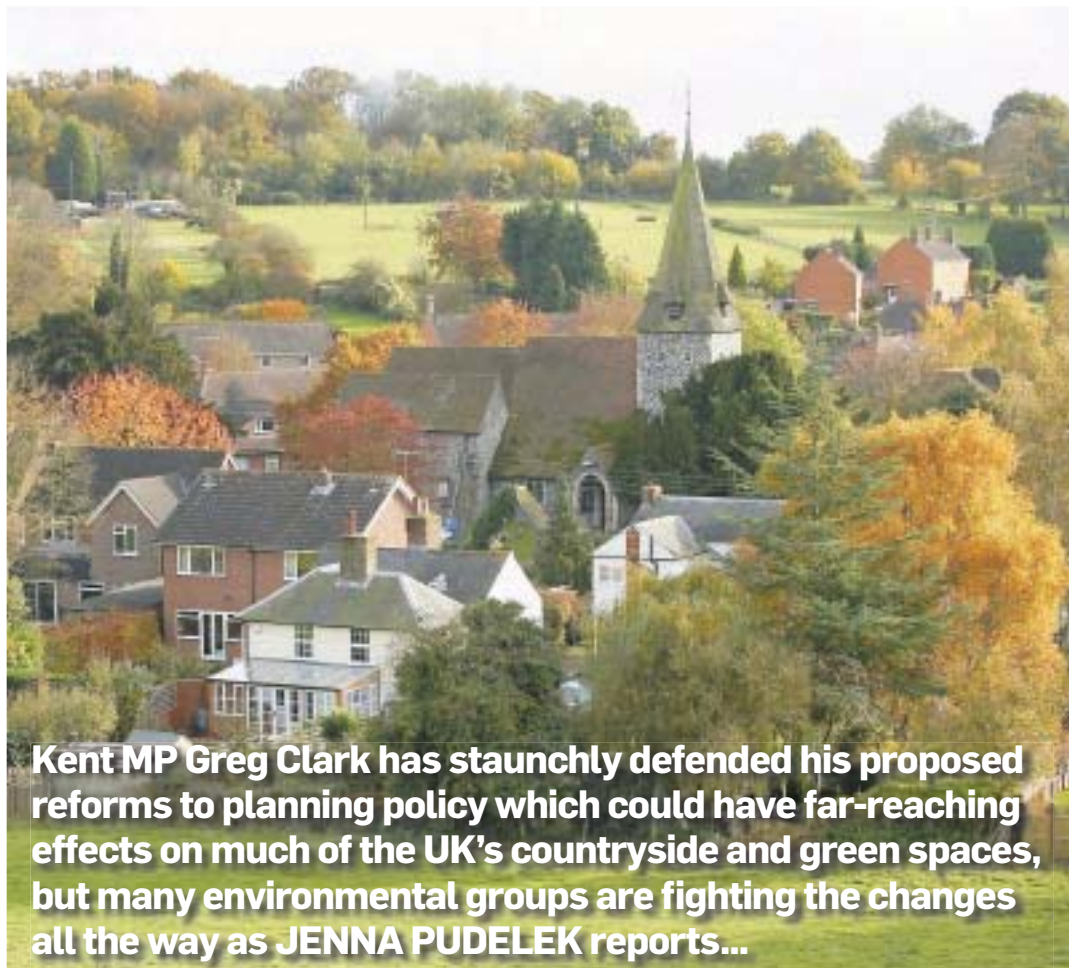

After last week's meeting, the National Trust emerged refusing to enter into any more talks with ministers until they have a statement from the highest levels of government saying the planning system does not exist to "principally" promote economic development.

Meanwhile, Mr Clark was hopeful of placating the objectors, saying: "The objective of the National Trust and my objectives are perfectly compatible. I believe a smaller planning system is needed to provide new homes for the next generation and we need to do it in a way that does not damage the natural environment."

"Given both of us aim for these outcomes the best thing to do is go through in detail the framework, to look specifically at what their suggestions and concerns are."

The consultation on the framework continues until the middle of October and Mr Clark said he would respond to any "sensible" points raised. There will then be time to reflect on the results, he said, before it is considered by the select committee. It is due to become law in April 2012.

Mr Clark has ruffled a few feathers locally as well as nationally. Protect Kent, the county's branch of the CPRE which, like the National Trust has an overlap in membership with the Conservative Party, branded his comments that

Kent MP Greg Clark has staunchly defended his proposed reforms to planning policy which could have far-reaching effects on much of the UK's countryside and green spaces, but many environmental groups are fighting the changes all the way as JENNA PUDELEK reports...

I believe a smaller planning system is needed to provide new homes for the next generation and we need to do it in a way that does not damage the natural environment

the CPRE has objected to every change in planning policy since he could remember, "unprofessional". After he said he didn't think the Kent Greens could have read the framework, the party's spokesman hit back insisting the consultation was based upon making development easier.

Meanwhile, the Tunbridge Wells Conservative Association has thrown its weight behind Mr Clark, who enjoys strong support in his constituency. The association's officers wrote a letter to the Sunday Times in response to an article that suggested Mr Clark and the Government do not have the support of Tory members locally.

"Greg Clark has always been a true champion of our beautiful local environment and opportunities for the next generation. In striving for these goals he and the Government have the wholehearted support of his local Conservative association," they wrote.

Talking about reports the planning reforms were causing a split among Tory supporters, Mr Clark said: "Everyone in Tunbridge Wells knows I've always been passionate about the environment. I've always said that regional assemblies should not be imposing housing numbers that were not determined by local people.

"Localism has been my crusade throughout all my time as MP for Tunbridge Wells. What we are doing with the planning system is giving power to local people, but making sure there are robust safeguards, making sure the green belt is protected, and natural and historical sites."

After the meeting with Mr Clark, the National Trust said in a statement: "We met with Greg Clark and he invited us to engage now in dialogue about the detail of the NPPF document. While we welcome this, we're not prepared to enter into such talks until we have a clear statement, from the highest levels of Government, clarifying the planning system is not there principally to promote economic development."

Their concerns were backed by celebrity chef Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall, who said new food growing spaces were desperately needed and in huge demand from communities.

"We can't allow Government to put new growing spaces at risk. It's essential land is still allocated in cities, towns and villages for this purpose. We know people are desperate to grow their own food, so we must do everything we can to ensure they have the space to do so," he said.

GREEN AND PLEASANT LAND: If the Government's planning reform does go ahead there are fears that large-scale developments could spring up across the UK's countryside

KENT REMEMBERED

CHARACTER: Charles Dickens' fascinating characters are as popular today as they have ever been

Book helps us to celebrate one of our literary greats

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

FEBRUARY 7 next year marks the 200th birthday of one of the legends of English literature – Charles Dickens.

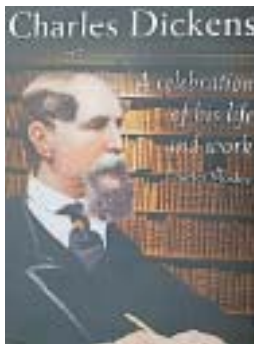

For most authors the bicentenary of a birthday are pretty much irrelevant, but not one whose characters and phrases continue to live to this day.

Creations of the writer, who was so strongly inspired by Kent, such as Oliver Twist, David Copperfield, Ebenezer Scrooge and Mr Pickwick have passed into legend – as have quotes from the great writer.

"It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done" and "it was the best of times, it was the worst of times", from A Tale of Two Cities – along with "annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure nineteen six, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pound ought and six, result misery" from David Copperfield, are among the best known passages ever written.

Writer Charles Mosley has put together a lavishly illustrated guide to the author and his characters – called Charles Dickens: A Celebration of his Life and Work, published by Worth Press.

As well as focusing on the novels it also looks into the role of Dickens as a social reformer and sets his work in a historical context.

Each novel is examined, with character details and a story summary. Maps feature locations connected with the writer and his work both in Britain and across the world

As the book states: "Above all it celebrates his very existence. As a good birthday should."

The Rochester area was the inspiration for many of Dickens' greatest works. Restoration House in the town was Satis House in Great Expectations, where the magnificent Miss Havisham lived.

Charles Dickens spent five of his childhood years in Medway from 1817 to 1822.

Gad's Hill Place was the country home of Charles Dickens, where he lived for 13 years until his death in 1870.

Dickens first saw the estate when he was nine years old and his father told him if he worked hard enough, he might one day own such a place.

After his success, the writer heard it was up for sale and turned Gad's Hill into his country home, entertaining many of his literary friends such as Hans Christian Andersen and Wilkie Collins there.

Surrounding the River Medway are the marshlands that appear in Great Expectations, although they are described as around the Thames in the book.

The Saxon Shore Way, between Hoo and Upnor, influenced the eerie marshes where some of the book's action is set while Cooling Church is the location of the famous opening scene, where Pip visits the graves of his family.

The little lozenge shaped graves which Pip stood beside can still be seen now.

Charles Dickens stayed at Bleak House in Broadstairs, formerly known as Fort House, periodically throughout his life. He fondly called it his 'airy nest' and the mansion was the inspiration for his novel, Bleak House.

In his study overlooking the sea, Dickens wrote the greater part of the novel David Copperfield.

Food festival continuing to tickle public's taste buds

NOW in its third year, the Broadstairs Food Festival is proving to be a big annual attraction for the seaside town. The event, which includes the three-day food fair that runs from Friday, September 30, to Sunday, October 2, attracts producers from around the county. Festival-organiser Bill Hackney said: "The festival started as an idea to extend the tourist season and create something that would definitely engage the local community and visitors and help business.

"So far we have been proved right."

More than 100 stallholders will be coming to the fair, which is held in the town's Victoria Gardens and Parade. There will also be cookery demonstrations in the kitchen theatre marquee.

The top chefs showing their culinary skills include a team from Thanet College catering department, Quex Park, Indian chef Dev Biswal and Jason Freedman from the successful Minnis bar and restaurant near Birchington.

"We have 14 cooking demonstrations in the kitchen theatre from great restaurants in Thanet and beyond. They are free and have proved to be very popular over the last couple of years," said Mr Hackney.

The festival has caught the wave of public interest in local produce.

Mr Hackney said: "The standard and quality of the food is incredibly high. I think it has filled one of the main criteria for its success because more and more Kent businesses want to sign up to sell and promote their goods."

Aside from the three-day fair, a number of other events have been organised.

On Friday, September 23, a live variety show, Bubble And Squeak, will be held to help raise funds for the festival. The entertainers, appearing at Theatre Royal Margate, include renowned jazz-singer Christine Tobin and punk-folk stars Nigel Burch and the Flea-Pit Orchestra.

A special festival beer is also being brewed for visitors to quench their thirst.

Mr Hackney said: "Eddy Gadd, from Gadd's

A DROP IN THE OCEAN:

brewery, is brewing a special green-hop ale for the festival. He will pick the hops just in time for the festival.

"Then, on Wednesday, October 5, he will have an open evening when people can go along and have a tour of the brewery."

Wine-lovers will get a chance to try English vintages at the Bottleneck Bar in Broadstairs on Sunday, October 2, while on Tuesday, September 27, Thanet College will hold an evening gala of gourmet food.

The dinner will give students a chance to showcase their food and take place in the college's own dining room, which has an impressive views of the coast.

New this year is the Broadstairs restaurant trail. Many of the town's wide variety of restaurants supporting the festival have signed up to take part.

Mr Hackney said: "It begins after the food fair and events will continue at the restaurants throughout the year."

Let's drink to new home of great dining

THE public house is one of the staple ingredients of British culture. It is our meeting place, somewhere to relax as well as have fun, and it is a place to celebrate weddings or remember those who have left us.

Pubs are the centre of the television soap universe and the scene of historical events.

But now, pubs are so much more than just good watering holes – they are places to dine and expect the best food.

Gastropubs and pub grub continue to make their mark in the restaurant world, attracting new chefs as well as Michelin-star experience.

In the last couple of years, renowned chefs have headed to the hostelrys of Kent to carve out new centres of culinary excellence.

Richard Phillips has extended his name to cover the Pearson's Arms pub in Whitstable, while The Swan at West Malling has won a Bib Gourmand and become Michelin-listed under the guidance of firstly Mark Sargeant and now Scott Goss.

Not only has this difference of usage become desirable to the diners but the pubs are also finding a good menu and a good meal will bring in more customers than those just popping in for a quick pint.

Long gone are the days where pub grub consisted of a burger and chips, and maybe a pickled egg if you were lucky.

It is now the freshly-produced local ingredients and fine dining that are becoming the norm.

There are many of these eateries dotted about our countryside and beaches right here in Kent, but here are six of the best...

HEALTH & BEAUTY

Easy tips for looking good all year round

WHEN summer is here and the weather is warm, looking good and keeping healthy often takes care of itself. Conditions are ideal for walking and relaxing outdoors during the long evenings and the water is always inviting when it comes to swimming.

But now that the days are growing shorter and there are more grey skies than blue, it's a real effort to ensure you look and feel your best.

So why not turn to the professionals for advice and help?

Good skin care is easy. Soap or lotion and moisturising are the two main ways you can improve the look of your skin. Pick a moisturiser with sun protection because sun damage is the main factor that ages skin. Vitamin E helps to revitalise your skin. Skin products that include retinol help minimise fine lines and help prevent wrinkles to a degree.

Get a good hair-cut. Often the more expensive salons tend to keep up-to-date with fashion trends and products and can offer hair care that makes the most of what you have.

Use a shampoo that is appropriate for your hair type and makes your hair look good.

If you want to change your hair colour, the best way is to get it done professionally; badly-done colour changes can say many negative things about you as a person.

Hair styles often need products for the best results. Waxes, gels, sprays, mousses and volumisers can help keep hair styles to stay looking good.

Balding hair looks best short, very short – no combing long hair over the top of a bald spot.

A balanced diet containing fresh vegetables and fruit is vital; it keeps you healthy and improves skin and hair.

Also try limiting your fast-food intake. Dietary food supplements and vitamins can help when a normal healthy diet is not possible.

Finally, make sure you get enough exercise. Use everyday opportunities to avoid a sedentary life – walk rather than take the car.

WALK

Eynsford

Visit www.kent.gov.uk/explorekent

Stunning views that would not be out of place on a postcard can be enjoyed on a walk that takes in the Darent Valley Path

This is a popular walk with photographers and you may wish to take your camera along and capture the striking views that await you across the valley.

From the Lullingstone Roman Villa car park, enjoy the invigorating walk up the hillside along the Darent Valley Path. When nearing the top, take a little time to turn back and enjoy the views across the river towards the village of Eynsford.

You will notice the impressive red-brick viaduct that carries the Swanley to Sevenoaks railway line and you may also catch a glimpse of Lullingstone Castle.

Following the pathway you will soon come across the Eagle Heights Birds of Prey Centre. The centre is one of the largest in the country, housing more than 50 species. Glance skywards as you pass by, as many of the birds can be seen soaring over the valley during the centre's daily demonstrations.

The route gradually descends towards the floor of the valley through the fields that have supported generations of local farmers since the Romans first settled near the River Darent.

Lullingstone Roman Villa is thought to have been first established around 75AD and is thought to be one of the best-preserved examples of Roman remains in Britain. Like many buildings, the villa grew with successive occupants; additions included a heated bath-suite and an underground pagan 'cult-room'.

The villa reached its peak of luxury in the mid-fourth century, when a lavish new dining room was added, complete with two excellent mosaics that can still be seen today. If you have time, the villa is a great place to visit and find out more about the rich history of the area.

Maritime folk the real deal So much music

Various Deal venues

Friday to Sunday, Sep 16-18
dealmaritimefolkfestival.org
Twitter: @DealFolk

DEAL is going to be bursting with music as the Deal Maritime Folk Festival hits town. Lis Clayton, festival organiser, said: "One the really nice features of our festival is the sheer variety of music which is happening in the local pubs. "This year is no exception and we have three packed days of great pub gigs and singarounds and playarounds.

"We will have 25 sessions over the weekend. The festival would not be as special as it is without Deal pubs' support" On Saturday, Smugglers Records presents a session at The Green Berry with Famous James And The Monsters, while an evening acoustic set at The Ship Inn will see all the smugglers' talent deployed. For those who love traditional folk, there is the RNLI benefit concert at Walmer lifeboat house, hosted by the Deal Hoodeners on Sunday at 11am. The festival-headliners this year include Nuru Kane on Friday night, Kimber's Men on Saturday and the beautiful songs of Martha Tilston for the finale on Sunday. All the headliners will play at the Astor Community Theatre. More details on the festival can be found at www.dealmaritimefolkfestival.org, at the festival's Facebook page or on Twitter. The full programme is available at The Landmark Centre, the Astor, Sound House, the library, Mark1 and other outlets.

Food festivals Kent Crisps take stage

Folkestone seafont

September 30 to October 2
Canterbury Eurofair
September 23-25

KENT Crisps take their place alongside some of Europe's top food-producers this month. The award-winning snacks produced by Quex Foods at Birchington are being shown at two of Kent's main food festivals: Canterbury Eurofair, from September 23-25, and the Broadstairs Food Festival from September 30-October 2. Canterbury's three-day fair attracts hundreds of county and European food-producers to its streets. The city also has close links with Kent Crisps, whose Ashmore cheese-and-onion-flavoured crisps received a national Great Taste Award in July.

The Broadstairs seafont festival is supported by Thanet-trained TV chef Gary Rhodes and Kent Crisps; it this year features a kitchen theatre, plus stalls of fresh fish and local produce.

Anthony Curwen, of Quex Foods, said: "Both festivals have become major events in the South East calendar. I am delighted Kent Crisps have a part to play in promoting our superb county." Visit www.kentcrisps.com.

Theatre art Magic, dance and illusion

Memorial Theatre, Broadstairs

Saturday October 1
0845 2626263

A FUSION of dance and illusion featuring dance artist Paula Templeman and illusionist Doctor Bondini takes place at the Sarah Thorne Theatre Club. These two performers have combined to create a sensational presentation of dance, magic and illusion. After a demonstration of time and its effects on reality by a 19th-century physicist, this piece of creative theatre takes us on an exciting journey exploring the realms of conflicting emotions and phases within the lives of various characters. Music, physical theatre and drama complement the dance and illusion to create a thought-provoking experience. Theatre manager Michael Wheatley-Ward said: "Bondini has created some astonishing new illusions for this show, which, combined with the beauty and elegance of Paula's range of creative movement and dance genres, makes an incredible spectacle." Tickets cost £10.50 (members) and £12.50 (non-members).

Balkan sound meets Bach Dynamic duo

Deal

Friday, September 30
01304 381134

DEAL Festival launches its autumn series of concerts with In Accord, featuring Harriet MacKenzie on violin and Miloš Milivojević on accordion.

adventure into those roots. MacKenzie graduated from the Royal College Of Music and from that time has gone on to receive many awards for her playing. She has performed throughout Europe, America and Japan and has broadcast recitals live for BBC Radio 3, Classic FM and Hungarian radio. Milivojević is a prize-winner at many competitions and has appeared throughout Europe. See www.dealfestival.co.uk for details of this and other events. FOLLOWING another captivating year of the Edinburgh Fringe taking centre stage as the world's largest arts festival, stand-up comedy is riding high as the nation's 'must-do' night out. Enjoy a taste of the action as three of the UK's top stand-up comics come to Dover. # HOMES

To make the most of your walls and flooring, Topps Tiles has produced a style guide that combines colour and patterns to get the best look for your rooms

THE main development with tiles has been that they are seen less as a purely practical purchase and are becoming part of the main focal point to create a desired design. We're starting to see tiles with patterns to bring subtle interest to walls in kitchens.

For a vintage effect in the kitchen, use tiles with a geometrical pattern which feature heritage colours and chic designs. Using a grey grout with white tiles will give this look some authenticity

For interest, use a mosaic on the floor in the kitchen area – such as honeycomb.

For a traditional look, incorporate a random pattern with intricate decorative tiles in a focal area, such as a splashback, and combine a selection of décor designs for a personal touch. Mosaics are becoming a big trend as they are so versatile – you can create an entire feature wall for impact, to use as a splashback, or to add colour to plain tiles, create a border, create a focal strip, or mix and match textures.

Mosaics can also be used as a border to create sections throughout the room. Use metallic finishes and embossed patterns to add a little more interest and depth to the tile – there are a lot more ranges that have a metallic finish and embossed patterns. Smaller wall tiles in kitchens remain a favourite, while large-format tiles are increasing in popularity elsewhere in the home.

For those on a budget, use natural tones but combine subtle shades with a sequence of block pattern that will tease out tones in a wider country scheme.

Alternatively, combine on-trend monochrome tiles which feature texture for an effective modern look. Offering a contemporary twist on tradition, fuse classic design with contemporary style with the natural beauty of woodgrain-effect tiles.

The resurgence of wood-effect tiles is ideal for kitchens combining style, design and functionality to achieve the look and ambience that is desired, at the same time as using the kitchen how you intend, whether to socialise, cook, or both.

Reflect zones by mixing and matching ceramic in the kitchen area with real-wood flooring in the dining area, which reflects the trend for a multipurpose kitchen living space.

Reflect the trend to inject colour – iridescent mosaic tiles bring a touch of glamour into a kitchen. Their versatility allows you to create a unique design using sheets of mosaic to create a vertical or horizontal feature. Many ranges are suitable for walls and floors so you can even

■ Glistening and colourful tiles make an area seem larger and lighter, ensuring that functional rooms can be turned into decorative parts of the home continue elements of the feature throughout the room. Mix and match contrasting colours, finishes and textures to create depth and a dramatic look – black and white or colours.

Try contrasting vibrant colours from the same range, an on-trend brick style tile gives an eclectic style, while using glass will create a high modern look.

With the kitchen being a high-traffic area, stone flooring is definitely more hard-wearing than most other flooring options and has a timeless appeal. Available in an array of materials and finishes – limestone, travertine, marble, slate and granite – this type of flooring can also enhance the value of a property. The aesthetic appeal is that stone flooring features natural characteristics so there's a unique look every time.

Stone flooring also benefits by being suitable for underfloor heating and is water-resistant so quite versatile to the kitchen. Large-format tiles are almost replacing more traditional sizes – they create a seamless finish, continue and enhance the trend for open-plan living, making a kitchen feel larger.

Using the same tile on the wall as on the floor creates a beautiful seamless finish and makes the room feel much bigger. Stone flooring looks equally as beautiful in a traditional setting using classic styles and you can incorporate the grout as part of the design, for example using a darker grout with light tiles for a shabby-chic look.

Stone flooring does require care and maintenance to enhance the longevity of the product. If the sealers and enhancers are not used correctly, this could result in staining. Always wipe grout off at an angle and not down the grout lines as this will just pull out the grout.

Free information forum to keep landlords in the know

LANDLORDS in west Kent are invited to attend a free event on Monday, October 3, to find out how they can improve and protect their properties.

The West Kent Landlord Fair, which will take place at Tonbridge and Malling Borough Council's offices in Kings Hill, will begin at 4pm and landlords will have a chance to look round a special exhibition.

There will be a series of presentations on a range of key topics including:

- The value of the private rented sector in Kent by Brian Horton, from Kent County Council (KCCC)
- The opportunity that empty properties present by Andrew Lavender also KCC
- Legal advice for landlords by solicitor Tim Crook
- Landlord update by Marion Money, from the National Landlords Association.

Landlords will also have the opportunity to take part in workshops to learn more about electrical issues in the home, mortgages and the Local Housing Allowance.

The West Kent Landlord Fair has been organised in partnership by Tonbridge and Malling Borough Council, Tunbridge Wells Borough Council, Sevenoaks District Council and the National Landlords Association. The partnership organises an information forum for landlords three times a year, but has expanded the event this time to include an exhibition and workshops on key topics.

Tonbridge and Malling Cllr Jean Atkinson, said: "With excellent speakers, workshops and an exhibition, the West Kent Landlord Fair will provide landlords with key information on all the latest property issues. With so much available under one roof, I am sure landlords will find this a particularly useful session."

As places are limited, landlords are asked to book in advance by calling 01732 876395 or emailing privatesectorhousing@tmhc.gov.uk.

Demand for homes strong in county, claims builder

HILLREED Homes has reported that 40 per cent of its latest development in Kemsing, near Sevenoaks, has sold off plan.

The company says this demonstrates the need for homes in Kent.

"In the South East there is a severe lack of housing", said Jo Richards, marketing and corporate manager at Hillreed Homes.

"This is a purely private development which has captured the imagination of purchasers – hence the excellent response we have received and buyers' willingness to secure today's prices by buying off-plan.

"Often there are scary headlines in national newspapers which can be misleading if the figures refer to the country as a whole.

"There are pockets and certainly some counties which are far more robust than others.

"Here in the South East, within easy commuting distance of central London, supply and demand always dictate the marketplace, which is often quite different to other regions."

Springhead Gardens in Spring Head Road, Kemsing, comprises five large detached family homes, with just three houses remaining.

The development is on the south side of Kemsing village and within easy reach of the high street.

The homes benefit from being at the end of an established quiet residential road and sit at the foot of the North Downs.

Kemsing is a village with all the necessary requisites including shops, post office, library, church, recreation and playground plus several welcoming pubs.

There is also a number of good schools in the area.

The mainline station at Kemsing has trains to London with approximately 40 minutes 'travel time.

At Sevenoaks station, which is five miles distant, there is an approximate travel time to London of 35 minutes.

CHAPEL PLACE LIMITED

Land Agents

Maidstone Borough Council is due to publish its draft Core Strategy for public consultation in September setting out how many houses will be built in the period up to 2026, with a detailed, site specific allocation coming out after the Core Strategy has been approved. Like many local authorities, Maidstone is looking to provide less housing than required in the Borough.

In the South East Plan, its figure for the period 2006-2026 is 11,080 dwellings which has been now been reduced by 1,000 units. It has identified the main areas of new development as north west and south east Maidstone, as well as five key villages, namely Harrietsham, Lenham, Headcorn, Staplehurst and Marden. If landowners are looking to achieve development elsewhere, they will need to submit objections justifying why this should happen. Similarly, those with interests in the five key villages will need to support the strategy of development there.

This is a major opportunity for landowners and developers to promote their interests. Chapel Place Limited would be pleased to undertake the planning work on your behalf and would be pleased to discuss this in greater detail accordingly.

Green Yeti on the loose

By Sami Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HAVING pursued a safe but sure route to new popularity that has won umpteen UK customer satisfaction awards, Skoda appeared to make life hard for itself by launching the Yeti SUV in 2009.

Great name, but great expectations we all thought; if you name a car after the mythical Abominable Snowman then you might expect it to go to any inhospitable wastes you choose.

Truth is, Skoda's Yeti – even in 4x4 format – is no such beast. But it's still a tough character, underpinned by tried and tested powertrains and technology from parent brand VW.

Priced from just £14,830, it has been a huge success, gathering many other awards apart from those Skoda customer gongs, but how does this Skoda SUV – in its funky chunky pseudo 4x4 style body – fare in Skoda's supposedly emasculated Greenline eco format?

Without resorting to needless written emissions or literary consumption – it responds brilliantly.

When eco cars started to appear just a few years ago on their skinny, overly hard-wearing tyres and with silly economy-driven gear ratios, many keen drivers saw themselves losing the will to live.

However, even this high riding, front-wheel drive only SUV eco champion – surely a multiple contradiction in terms – is a pleasurable drive.

In most normal driving situations you will not find yourself hankering for much more from a chassis that grips and responds well to driver input, despite a high and fairly boxy body – the high 'command' driving position offers great visibility without the cornering lean suffered by many lofty vehicles. Acceleration is a respectable 12.1 seconds from 0-60mph.

But even if you do find yourself dwelling on that or any other shortcomings, you can comfort yourself with the knowledge that this Yeti

ELEGANT BEAST:

The Skoda Yeti Greenline is classy and robust and a pleasure to drive version costs a negligible £30 a year in road tax, and should average around 60mpg – a point I proved on a family jaunt from Kent to Somerset.

So sure-footed is the Yeti that we rarely missed 4x4 – our family motor is a Toyota RAV4 – in the wilds of the Glastonbury area.

The Yeti is also a good car to live with during this kind of long-term exposure:

The five-door design is more upright and practical than the Nissan Qashqai crossover – its most obvious rival – but looks classy and robust.

The cabin shows an unfussy yet durable style that is typical Skoda and impresses at the brand's usual value for money price point.

It's well-organised and equipped with clever storage such as the collapsible boot bin and useful hooks – the depth of thought at design stage is quite obvious and typical of the Czech brand.

Ride and comfort is excellent and the rear seats rake for extra lounging appeal or accommodation of a child seat.

Rear legroom is exceptional even when those in front are greedy, and the three rear chairs can be tumbled and arranged individually a la MPV, or even removed for varied and ultimate load capacity.

With its tall back end and high lift tailgate cum rain shelter, the Yeti is also an excellent makeshift grandstand cum picnic station.

Personally, I would still opt for the 4x4 versions to get the extra grip that goes with the styling but, make no doubt, the Skoda's SUV looks disguise a car that is every bit capable of competing in the new crossover arena or tackling MPVs head on.

With a line-up of terrific engines, ranging from small and lively low emission turbocharged petrol engines to sophisticated diesels, including the 105PS (104bhp) 1.6-litre unit in the Greenline, there's a Yeti to suit anyone.

Like its elusive namesake, it's not cuddly, but you should be curious to know more.

HY to Peugeot history-maker

ORDER books are open for the Peugeot 3008 HYbrid4 – the world's first full diesel hybrid. Combining diesel and electric power, it offers big ownership savings via improved CO2 emissions and fuel economy, including ZEV (Zero Emission Vehicle) fully electric mode. Combining family hatch, MPV and SUV, including 4x4 function, prices start from £26,995.

What a coup for Vauxhall

WHAT Car? magazine has voted Vauxhall's Ampera as Green Car of the Year. Basically an electric vehicle, it uses a small petrol engine to recharge batteries on longer journeys to dispel 'range anxiety' – the bane of electric-car ownership. A What Car? spokesman said: "It offers all the benefits of owning an electric vehicle with virtually none of the drawbacks."

Picanto picked for green gong

IN the real world where conventional fuels and car prices still rule, the same What Car? awards voted the Kia Picanto 1.0 1 Air 'top green supermini' – the key sector for economy. What Car? described the all-new Korean, priced from £7,795, as "remarkably grown up" and with damaging NOx emissions 25 times less than its nearest diesel rival.

Evoque evokes interest

LAND Rover dealer Barretts of Canterbury and Ashford has complimented the brand on how it has 'evoked' interest in its ground-breaking new compact Range Rover model

Mark Nicholas, Barretts Land Rover brand director, said: "Advance publicity for the new Evoque has been superb, generating huge interest in the car and swallowing up a lot of our initial allocation. But there are still opportunities and we are taking lots of bookings for test drives."

Barretts launched the car at the weekend after an exclusive preview for 200 guests across both franchises a couple of days earlier.

While many industry watchers have commented on the inclusion of a front-wheel drive only version in the Evoque line-up – a first for Land/Range Rover – Mr Nicholas said full 4x4 models dominated his dealerships' order book.

The Evoque has been bagging awards for some time, despite appearing in showrooms only days ago; last month it scooped the prestigious Auto Express Car of the Year award.

Citing the Evoque's 'mould breaking' looks and driving dynamics as key factors in its success, the magazine also praised its keen pricing

IN DEMAND: The new Land Rover Evoque has generated huge interest

(from £27,955) adding: "The Evoque puts the hugely desirable Range Rover brand within the reach of compact executive car buyers for the very first time. The fact it looks and drives the way it does serves only to underline its premium appeal.

"You have only to look at its concept car styling to see why the British firm already has a bulging order book for the new baby of its range. Its appeal goes far beyond its distinctive styling."

Underlining the marketing savvy that has also backed a fine looking car, the British brand also delivered the first new Evoque to a royal customer.

Zara Phillips, who is also a leading equestrian, Land Rover ambassador and new wife to England rugby star Mike Tindall – currently with the World Cup team in New Zealand.

She said: "I've grown up around Land Rovers and have been an ambassador for the brand for several years – I am really looking forward to getting behind the wheel of my new Evoque. It looks fantastic and I am delighted to be the first person in the UK to take delivery of one."

The new Evoque is available either as a three or five-door, with a choice of three engines, three design themes and a wider range of options and accessories.

Dealer teams up with the Addicks for Motability deal

CWJ KING – one of the fastest growing vehicle dealer groups in the South East and Kent – has teamed up with the Charlton Athletic Community Trust (CACT), the UK's largest football related charity.

The initiative sees WJ King, a family-run firm of more than 50 years, operating six franchises – Vauxhall, Peugeot, SEAT, Suzuki, Hyundai and Kia – across 12 sites, become CACT's Official Motability Partner.

The collaboration will also bring WJ King advertising in the Charlton Athletic match programme and on the club's e-bulletin during this season, with special offers available to Charlton Athletic season ticket holders and Red Card members.

WJ King's Motability Scheme will support the acclaimed work of the Charlton Athletic Community Trust's Disability and Mental Health programme, which includes the award winning Charlton Upbeats – the Down's Syndrome sports club.

Jeff Conway, WJ King's group sales manager (pictured left), said: "We are delighted to enter into this agreement with such a respected charity as the Charlton Athletic Community Trust.

"CACT's renowned work in the community and, in particular their successful disability and mental health programme, make them the perfect partners for our Motability Scheme."

Jason Morgan, CACT CEO (pictured right) said: "We are justifiably proud of what we have achieved in our disability and mental health programme and having the support of such a company as WJ King can only help us to enhance the service that we provide."

OPTIMISTIC: Promoted Medway Park Crusaders

BASKETBALL

Crusaders hope new-look squad makes step up

THE basketball season gets under way this weekend with newly-promoted Medway Park Crusaders keen to establish themselves in English Basketball League Division One.

Victory in the third tier play-off final in April capped off the club's most successful season. The intention is to do more than just survive at the higher level and the squad has been extensively revamped during the summer.

Several new signings bring experience of Division One, including Adrian Fenyn, who has been the league's top scorer for the past two seasons.

With a limited budget, head coach James Vear has put the additions down to the excellent facilities at Medway Park and the club's reputation for playing attacking, high tempo basketball.

He said: "To get players in who are proven at this level shows how ambitious the club is and we're excited to get going. If I'm honest, if we finish in the top half that would be pretty good and anything better would be a bonus."

Before the league begins next month the competitive games start with two cups.

On Saturday the Crusaders visited Reading Rockets in the National Trophy, before hosting a National Cup tie against Hackney White Heat (tip-off is at 3pm).

CHANCE: Rapha's Kristian House may well attack in the Tour of Britain's final stage in London

CYCLING

London last hope of stage glory for combative House

By Glenn Pearson

glenn.pearson@archant.co.uk

AS the Tour of Britain rolls into London for the final two stages of this year's eventful race, Kent rider Kristian House is focused firmly on one last chance of a race win.

With Tuesday's stage from Kendal to Blackpool being cancelled, the race's top teams literally shattered the field to pieces in Wednesday's stage around Stoke.

House, who rides for Rapha Condor Sharp, was boxed in when the stage's main move happened and the Tour's General Classification formed.

The Canterbury-born rider lost more than four minutes and while that ended his GC hopes, it meant he was free to contend for a stage win, the one goal still left to achieve in his career.

Stage four from Welshpool to Caerphilly represented a real chance and after House managed to get away, he, together with two other riders, built up a gap of six minutes on the chasing peleton that meant he was the virtual leader on the road.

However, they were brought back by bunch powerhouses, Sky and Rabobank, and despite a last-ditch attempt to get away, which earned him the day's combative award, dreams of a stage win were over.

"It was nice because people will have talked about that and you get a bit more publicity out of it, but in the back of your mind you know it's not going to last," House said. "When you've got guys in the bunch like Sky, Rabobank and Leopard Trek, this is what they do for a living and when they decide to bring the hammer down, they do it pretty quickly."

Despite missing out, House is confident a domestic team will win a race in the near future and is hoping to feature prominently in Sunday's final stage in London. A time trial precedes the final stage, which House believes will come down to a bunch sprint for HTC's Mark Cavendish.

"The time trial will decide how that last stage is raced, more than likely it will be a big bunch sprint with someone like Cav doing what he does best and winning," he said.

GB forward adds to ladies' title ambitions

A Great Britain international has moved to Canterbury ladies on the eve of the new hockey season to boost the side's hopes of capturing the English Hockey League Premier Division title.

Charlotte Craddock made the switch to Polo Farm just in time for the season opener at home to Reading on Saturday. The 20-year-old forward has 45 international caps but arrives with something to prove after falling down the pecking order with less than a year until the Olympics.

Nick Clark, Canterbury ladies' coach, is delighted with the signing and believes the squad are an improvement from last season, when they missed out on the title by just two points.

He said: "It's a great move for us. Charlotte's looking to get back into fa-

"I think we're slightly better placed than we were 12 months ago, the

Defender Dilly Newton has also joined, taking the squad's England contingent to four. Newton and Craddock were in line for debuts this weekend, but Natalie Seymour and Susannah Townsend will miss the first two games after featuring at the European Championships last month.

Canterbury's men are back in Conference East after relegation from the top flight last season. They will be keen to bounce straight back, as they did two seasons ago, from a division which also includes Holcombe and Bromley & Beckenham.

On the women's side, Sevenoaks and Maidstone are bidding to get out of Conference East and join Canterbury among the country's elite.

With Maidstone only winning promotion into the division in the spring, Sevenoaks look better placed to mount a serious challenge. They won

New Motorbase driver on bumper Rockingham grid

By Steve Tervet

steve.tervet@archant.co.uk

SPECULATION surrounding Motorbase Performance's plans to run a third car in the British Touring Car Championship (BTCC) was finally ended this week when the Kent team unveiled Michael Caine as their new driver.

A season dominated by Mat Jackson's fight for the drivers' championship has also been filled with rumours about who would take the third seat at Motorbase, competing in the BTCC as Airwaves Racing.

Caine, 42, who tested the Airwaves Ford Focus at Brands Hatch last week, has twice finished runner-up in the Porsche Carrera Cup GB since joining Wrotham-based Motorbase in 2006.

Team principal David Bartrum said: "Michael Caine is the longest-serving Motorbase Performance driver, so we know him as good as we will ever know any other driver.

"Michael does everything he can for the team; he's a Motorbase team player through and through and is the perfect team-mate to drive alongside Mat [Jackson] and Liam [Griffin].

"The team and Michael are under no illusions that he's taking on a particularly tough task at the hardest point of the season, but with his personality he will be a great addition to the BTCC. I know a lot of people want to see him have this chance so I hope that all the fans will give him the support he rightly deserves."

Caine's first taste of the series comes at Rockingham this weekend, with Airwaves looking to cement their place at the top of the independent teams' championship.

DEBUT: Michael Caine makes his BTCC bow this weekend after being named as Airwaves Racing's third driver

"It's an opportunity that I thought would never ever arise and I'm delighted," he said. "I just hope that I can represent Motorbase and the sponsors in the correct manner to deliver the results that the team deserve and support Mat and Liam with their challenge for the championship."

The addition of Caine to the BTCC grid may have dominated the headlines at Motorbase this week, but the focus for Jackson remains firmly on closing the gap to Gordon Shedden and Matt Neal at the top of the standings, following a disastrous race day at Knockhill in the last round.

Jackson, 30, returned from the Scottish circuit with only one point to show for his efforts and the 30-year-old now faces an uphill struggle if he is to keep alive Motorbase's dream of overhauling the Honda Civics of Shedden and Neal in the title race.

A deficit of 23 points is not unassailable, with nine races still to come, but Jackson will almost certainly need both of his rivals to slip up if he is to catch them.

The Rockingham grid is set to feature 27 cars this weekend, the largest number in the BTCC since 1994. Among them will be Dartford's Tony Gilham, back in action after losing his seat at 888 Racing due to a lack of sponsorship.

The 32-year-old was not involved at Knockhill, but has now teamed up with Geoff Steel Racing and will drive a normally-aspirated BMW this weekend, with the team hoping to switch to a turbo engine before the end of the season. Gilham made a promising start to the season, scoring six points in the first nine races, although his last top-10 finish came back in May.

The first of Sunday's three races gets under way at 11.30am.

Empty promises give Open golfer debt headache

WITHIN weeks of appearing at The Open Championship, Andy Smith is struggling to make ends meet after assurances of financial backing made at the tournament fell through.

The 26-year-old provided one of the most intriguing stories in the build-up to the tournament when he stunned experienced tour professionals to come through qualifying with a set of borrowed clubs in his first tournament in months.

Although he missed the cut at Royal St George's, the exposure led to several offers of sponsorship which looked set to give him the security to play regularly again.

The reality has been very different as the Maidstone golfer has found the offers dry up since the tournament in July.

Smith has played three events on the low profile Alps Tour in recent weeks, making one cut, but admits without the added funding since The Open, it is tough.

He said: "I'm still struggling for sponsors. There were a lot of promises made at The Open which haven't come to anything. It's a massive worry because I'm in quite a bit of debt at the moment."

The focus is on earning a place on tour for next season. Smith heads to Italy later this month for the start of the European Tour's qualifying school, a three-stage process which sees hundreds of hopefuls attempt to gain a place among the elite.

Another option would be to try his luck in the United States. After playing a practice round at The Open with Rory Sabbatini the South African offered to pay for Smith to enter qualifying school for the PGA Tour in November, which is one promise which looks set to be kept.

GOLF

Royal Cinque Ports given annual Open qualifying

KENT will have a role in The Open Championship every year from 2014 after one of the county's top courses was selected as a fixed venue for Final Qualifying.

Royal Cinque Ports in Deal was one of four clubs in Britain to receive the honour this month from tournament organisers The R&A.

Under the existing system four venues near to The Open course stage the last stage of qualifying, but from 2014 they will be spread out across Britain to improve accessibility for players.

Royal Cinque Ports is a former Open Championship venue and hosted Final Qualifying for this year's tournament, held in Sandwich at Royal St George's.

Martin Bond, Cinque Ports' secretary, said: "I think The R&A enjoyed being here in the summer and invited us to take over from 2014.

"We have good facilities here, a fantastic course and a great team of employees all of which contributed to a really positive experience.

"It's very nice for the club to be a part of and we're all thrilled about it."

The initial agreement with The R&A, which also covers Glasgow Gailes Links, Hillside, and Woburn is for four years, when the process will be reviewed.

The accolade is the latest boost for the club, which is the venue for two other prestigious tournaments in the near future.

Next year they have the Caris Trophy, England's Under-18 strokeplay championship, while in 2013 the Amateur Championship returns for the first time since 1982.

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL FOCUS

WITH FRED ATKINS

Take the oath

“AROUND a decade ago the Kent League waged an unwinnable war when it declared a zero tolerance policy on bad language in a bid to make its grounds more family friendly.

That intention was laudable enough. Average gates were so pitiful that attendance statistics were exaggerated. A minimum figure of 50 was published, as if this would somehow spare a club from embarrassment, even if the number of paying customers was often far lower.

At some grounds the crowds were almost entirely made up of relatives of the playing staff, with the limited number of paying customers almost exclusively white and male.

In a bold but doomed bid to broaden the fan base, it was decided to crack down on abusive language. And, as with most zero tolerance strategies, it died on its backside. The policy singled out the weakest clubs for punishment. Swearing born of frustration will inevitably increase in a struggling side and in one game Canterbury City, bottom of the table at the time, were reduced to seven players.

It also failed to distinguish between heat-of-the-moment obscenity and far more sinister forms of intimidation, either verbal or physical.

Higher authorities than the Kent FA are still trying to strike a balance. Wayne Rooney was banned for three games after he swore into a microphone last season, but escaped retrospective punishment after his elbow somehow ended up in Wigan's James McCarthy's face, on the surreal grounds the referee had seen the incident.

The message that sends out is swearing is a more heinous crime than violent conduct and it hasn't had any impact on offensive behaviour.

Earlier this season the atmosphere at an otherwise competitive Ryman League derby featuring two Kent clubs was soured when the respective managers began openly abusing each other in full view of the main stand, thinly disguising their exchanges as banter.

A few years ago I sat in the press box at another Kent ground while directors were discussing a group of baseball-hatted urchins loitering behind the goal.

The consensus was their language was unacceptable. Unfortunately at that exact moment their central defender blundered and his partner screamed an obscenity at him that echoed around the ground.

Most children are smart enough to know this isn't the kind of language you'd repeat in a classroom – Nick Hornby wrote that as an adolescent he realised swearing was tacitly accepted in football grounds when it clearly wasn't elsewhere. And perhaps that's because trying to eradicate swearing in football is, to paraphrase Martin Sheen, like handing out speeding tickets at the Indy 500. If you were able to sit through England's last World Cup campaign without uttering an oath, I'd suggest you're either a monk, or a Scotsman.

Pools move still sinking in for Jack

Teenager Jack Baldwin tells our man STEVE TERVET about his shock move to Hartlepool United

FROM Faversham Town's reserve side and the rigours of sixth-form studies to a life-changing week in the north-east and a dream ticket to the world of professional football, Jack Baldwin has had quite a year.

Just two months ago, the 18-year-old was finalising arrangements for the start of his sports therapy course at the University of Kent in Medway, but everything was about to change.

Baldwin was spotted playing in Ryman Division One South with Faversham last season by a Hartlepool United scout, and was soon offered a trial with the League One club.

However, a knee injury, sustained in the final game of the season, looked to have set him back at the worst possible time and when a pre-season trial with Gillingham ended in disappointment, Baldwin could have been forgiven for thinking his chance had passed.

However, as he describes, his remarkable tale was only just the beginning.

He said: "Unfortunately, [Gilling-ham manager] Andy Hessenthaler said he didn't think I was quite ready for League football yet. Although, he said that if I still wanted to go to uni and train with them, I could.

"I'd got my place confirmed, I'd applied for my accommodation and my loan was sorted out. I came up to Hartlepool for a week, I trained and played a few games and I didn't need to go back to Gillingham or to university because I was successful.

"The manager [Mick Wadsworth] said 'we'd like to offer you a contract' and I said 'great'. It was all amazingly quick."

That Baldwin was even in the Faversham side when the Pools scout visited Salter's Lane would have seemed unlikely at the start of last season.

An under-18 player at Chatham Town, he was persuaded to head down the A2 and try his hand with the Lilywhites' reserves, before a spate of injuries to more senior players prompted manager Justin Luchford to give him a chance in the first-team. Baldwin said: "They helped me so much in terms of my fitness and what I could be doing to improve.

FUTURE: Baldwin looks to impress in an outing for Hartlepool's reserves

PROSPECT: Baldwin on the ball in his Ryman League days at Faversham

"As a young lad, to go to a semi-pro outfit like Faversham and get games was very good for me.

"I was on the bench for quite a bit, getting 20 minutes here and there.

"It wasn't the best way to be drafted in, because of injuries, but when I stepped in, people were watching, so I suppose I was in the right place at the right time."

Baldwin is having to grow up quickly, living more than 250 miles from his hometown of Barking, Essex, although in former Newcastle United and Peru midfielder general Nolberto Solano, he could scarcely ask for a better mentor on the training pitch.

"He's really helpful to the younger lads, he's always got positive words and ways to help us develop our game," he said.

"There are a few new faces this season, so there's not really a lot of pressure on me being the only new one."

Gills strike it lucky with Nouble signing

THE hunt for a striker to boost Gillingham's firepower finally came to an end this week with Frank Nouble arriving on loan from West Ham.

The 20-year-old agreed an initial one-month agreement on Thursday and was expected to make his debut in Saturday's trip to Hereford United.

Nouble, a former Chelsea apprentice, has a decent pedigree, making 15 appearances for the Hammers in the last two seasons. He is also familiar to loan spells, appearing for Swansea City, Barnsley and Charlton Athletic last season.

The move was at least in part down to Ian Hendon, who left the coaching set-up at Gillingham this summer to take up a role as West Ham's development coach.

Gills boss Andy Hessenthaler said: "[Nouble] is a quick one, so he will bring something different to the side. He has good experience and been around a few clubs already on loan. I think he should slot in nicely alongside Danny Kedwell and hopefully bring a few goals to the club.

"Frank has an excellent pedigree and comes to us from a proper club and I would like to thank West Ham and Ian Hendon for helping us out on this one. Frank needs games and hopefully we can help him, like we helped Cody McDonald last season."

If Nouble can make half the impact McDonald did Gillingham would be delighted. The striker netted 25 goals while on loan from Norwich City last season, finishing as the club's top scorer.

The move will have come as something of a relief to Gillingham's fans and staff alike. The club have spent two months searching for a replacement to fill the void left by Adam Birchall's long-term injury.

NEW MAN: Frank Nouble signed for Gillingham on Thursday evening

Earlier in the week Hessenthaler revealed the club had made a failed bid for Oxford's Jon-Paul Pittman, who opted to join League Two rivals

Crawley Town on loan instead.

Gambia international Njogo Demba-Nyren also featured in a trial game this week, but Nouble looks a far better option as a partner for Kedwell.

Jury out following first pink ball trial

Pictures: ADY KERRY

MIXED: Views were polarised after Kent trialled the first use of a pink ball under lights in England

By Glenn Pearson

glenn.pearson@archant.co.uk

THE great pink ball experiment continued to divide opinions amongst Kent's players, staff and members during their historic final game of the season.

The first ever championship match under lights was played at the St Lawrence Ground in Canterbury this week, bringing a rather surreal end to the 2011 cricket season. While it was a first for the four-day game played under floodlights and with a pink ball, the start time of 2pm and finish at 9pm also took some getting used to for the players, staff and supporters.

The general consensus was that there could be a future for championship cricket under lights, despite it being branded by the England and Wales Cricket Board as merely a trial for Test cricket. If you believe that you'll believe anything.

As for the experiment, the lights behaved as they pretty much have done all season and are proving to be a key feature of the St Lawrence redevelopment. The same can't be said of the ball. And yet again it's the Tiflex at the centre of the storm.

The Kent players have been highly critical of the Division Two ball all season, so one last chance to really give it a hammering is hardly surprising.

It was used in the first innings and at times was difficult to pick up from a spectator's view. It was superseded by the Kookaburra in the second innings, which retained its colour for longer.

Kent's director of cricket Paul Farbrace found his view changed during the course of the game, but was consistent on the use of the Tiflex ball.

"The Tiflex went so soft and the players have described it as like hitting a stone," he said. "It's soft on the outside with a hard centre, so when it hits the pitch it stays in there. It's pretty much a thumbs down on the Tiflex but the Kookaburra is a much better ball.

"It's been an interesting experiment and I have moved around a bit with my view on it. When it was first suggested I quite liked the quirky idea of it, then the closer we got to the game I thought 'I'm not too sure'. Now I think it's quite a good idea, although I'm not sure playing it last game of the season is great.

"I just wonder whether there might be an opportunity during the course of the season to have two rounds of championship games under lights. I think you might need to have them more in the middle of the summer, why not let the lights kick in?"

Stand-in skipper Geraint Jones was far from impressed and doesn't see the concept being used in the near future.

"The Tiflex needs some work because the colour is not ideal," he said.

"Once it got scuffed it became more of an off-white pinky colour rather than a brilliant colour. We'll see, it's an experiment and whether it's for us in the northern hemisphere as a way forward, I'm not sure. It strikes me as more of a southern hemisphere thing when there's less daylight hours."

While keen to explore new ways of attracting supporters to the game, the club's chief executive, Jamie Clifford, said the decision to play the game at short notice more than played its part.

He said: "Going back to the decision to do it, the one thing that annoys me was that it was so late in the day which puts us in a difficult position as a county.

"I would say a fifth of the members haven't come and it's a shame not to have them here and if there is anything I regret it's how it's left them."

During lunch on the second day, Azhar Mahmood was presented with his award after being voted Kent's player of the year.

THE VERDICT

6699

CLEARLY September is not the right time, but if that was changed and the ball is right, the game has to look at these things. It's fallen to us to play our part in the evolution of the game.

CEO, JAMIE CLIFFORD

IT had to be experimented with, in some ways I'm glad it was us as there has been a lot of media attention. I think if they get it in the right place I can see it becoming part of the calendar.

COACH, PAUL FARBRACE

IT'S an experiment and whether it's for us in the northern hemisphere as a way forward, I'm not sure. Can't see it happening in the near future until we get a ball of decent quality.

PLAYER, GERAINT JONES

IF they want to get a real view on it from the players and spectators, they should be doing it in May or June. I think it's well worth a trial and if they can agree on the ball they could introduce it.

KENT SCHOOL GAMES

Kent School Games to be expanded in Olympic year

THE third Kent School Games (KSG) begins later this year with organisers expecting it to build on previous successes which have made it a model nationwide.

More than 550 schools took part in the second games last year, with 30,000 young people participating in what is believed to be the largest event of its kind in Europe.

Double Olympic champion Dame Kelly Holmes and Hugh Robertson, minister for sport and the Olympics, are among its high-profile supporters and helped it gain wider recognition.

As part of the build-up to the London Olympics next year, all counties in England have been encouraged to copy Kent's blueprint and hold their own versions.

Heats for the third KSG are due to begin in November. The structure has had several changes from previous years, mainly around the finals days.

Formerly condensed into an intense period in the summer, the new system will see different sports reach their climaxes between February and June.

The size has again expanded, with 90 events in the finals compared to 63 last year. New venues will include the soon to be completed Cyclopark at Gravesend, which will stage a host of cycling events incorporated into the KSG for the first time.

Chris Hespe, head of sport, leisure and the Olympics at Kent County Council, said: "There's just so much enthusiasm for it and other sports want to be involved.

"It's very difficult to say no, so there's a momentum here which is driving the games to be bigger.

"As we have held two in the past there's a system in place for the delivery but we don't think in future the finals will be much bigger because there's a limit to our capacity."

The long-term intention is for all school sport in Kent to be part of the KSG, even intra-school house matches.

Before then organisers will make the most of the county's links with the Olympics. Youngsters competing in finals days at venues in Canterbury next summer may be cheered on by elite athletes, with Nepal's Olympic and Paralympic squads agreeing to attend events while they are in the area for pre-Games training camps.

More commitments from other teams coming to the county in 2012 are expected to follow in the next few weeks.
